An Admonitory

DISCOURSE

Concerning the

Late English Schism,

ADDRESS'D

To those of the Reformed, as well as Roman Religion abroad:

Wherein the ancient RIGHTS of Bishops, and their IN DEPENDENCY of the Secular Magistrate, are Asserted and Recommended.

It will be reckon'd as no small Sin to us, if we should cast off those that, Unblameably and Holily, bring us the Benefits of the Episcopate.

Let it therefore fuffice, that the Book, which is now submitted to the Reader's Perusal, has the Famous Mr. Henry Dodwell for its Author, a Person whom I'wo Universities Contend for, Oxford and Dublin; the Latter having given Him that Edu-cation which all Christendom stands instructed by; and the former prefer'd Him to its History Professor's Post, the Voluntary refult of his unquestionable Merit, not of any previous Interest Whatsoever. Accordingly the Town was immediately full of Treatifes concerning the Lawfulness, and Unlawfulness of the Government, then in Being. Among the Rest, our Learned Author was not Idle, but thinking it His Duty to Confirm the Gentlemen that feem'd to waver and halt between Two Opinions, in the same Sentiments, He himself was steadfast in; publish'd several Tracts, Names of which I have not leave to fet down in this Prefatory Account. What remains for me to premife is, That as the Book has been very acceptable to the Publick, from the Sale of it, in a Forreign Tongue, so it is to be hop'd it may plead for a Reception among Englishmen, in their own Native Language. If the Translator has not come up to the Beauties of the Original, and done that Justice to the Author, so difficult an Undertaking deserv'd, he has nothing to Urge in his Behalf, but that his Great Zeal for for the Propagation of found Learning, and a deep Inspection into Ecclesiastical and Civil History, induc'd him to attempt this Version; and that if he can but have Mr. Dodwell's Pardon, he stands secur'd of the Thanks of the English Reader.

A TABLE of what is contained in the feveral Sections.

- I. THE common Interest of our Church, with those abroad, reason sufficient to make them sear the ill Consequences of our Example.
- 2. The Cause of the late Schism, by no means to be imputed to the Bishops.
- 3. Wholly owing to our Adversaries, who substituted succesfors into the Sees of the Bishops, who were only deprived by the late Power.
- 4. Our Behaviour to be judged by the Doctrine of the Primitive Church.
- 5. And not by the Prejudices and receiv'd Opinions of the modern Churches.
- 6. The Apostles in the Christian Clergy of Jerusalem, exactly answer'd the High Priests in the Jewish Sanedrim. The Reason why Christians of the same Order, went by another Name.
- 7. The Kinsmen of our Lord had the first place in the College of Apostles.
- 8. From the second College of the Christian Presbyters of Jerusalem, other Churches took the like Pattern.

9. Hence

- 9. Hence it follows, that in the first age of this Apostles, all Christian Churches were Subject to that of Jerusalem.
- 10. During this space, the Church of Jerusalem, and its Itinerary Ministers looked after the Discipline of the whole Church.
- 11. The Bishop of Jerusalem, the Principle of Catholick Unity.
- 12. This Primacy of the Church of Jerusalem, seems to have been known in the very next age after the Apostles
- 13. The Constitution of the Modern Church-Government altho' it slowed from the Apostles, yet 'tis younger than, any of the Writings of the New Testament, and therefore not to be expected there.
- 14. Tis not necessary that the Form of Church-Government, now to be observed, should be expressly laid down in the Holy Scriptures.
- 15. The Race of our Lord and David extinct, A. D. 107, or rather perhaps 125, or 104.
- 16. Bishops succeeded in the several Churches equal to the Bishop of Jerusalem, when that See flourished.
- 17. And that according to the Will of our Lord, and bis Apostles.
- 18. The first Bishops had their Power given them by the Apostles, but not such a one as excused them from their Obedience due to the Apostles.
- was at Ephesus, where St. John the Apostolical College President.
- 20. From that time the primacy translated from the Church of Jerusalem, to that of Ephesus.
- 21. Bythis Apostolical College of Ephesus, the new Power.

22. And yet this new Title of Bishop did not exempt'em from being Subject to the Apostles.

24. The Martyrdom of Ignatius, A. D. 112, or

25. The Writings of Ignatius suited to this time. No mention in him of the Church of Jerusalem, which was now destroy'd. His Commendation of the Episcopate, then very seasonable.

26. Ignatius writes so, as if he had before his Eyes, what we have been talking of.

27. Why together with the Power, the Name likewise of Bishop was so soon received in the cheif Seats better accounted for by our Hypothesis, than by that affectation of the sirst place, to which the Presbyterians ascribe it.

28. The Name of Bishop in its primary signifiation proper to GOD, from thence transfer'd.

29. Ignatius says the same, and the Holy Scriptures before him.

30. The Apostles and Presbyters of forreign Churches, the invested with no coercive power, call d Bishops, because they supervised the Distribution of Alms, that were consecrated to GOD.

31. The Name of Bishop, as taken for the Principle of Unity perhaps applied to any but the Nowwood of poi, but after the Apostles justly afforted to them.

Faith.

48. That Unity of the Catholic Church is very uncertain, which depends upon the Bishop of one Church, as the Head of all the rest.

49. The parity of Bishops, more for the public Good of the Church, than if the Bishop of Rome had been the only Heir of the Bishop of Jerusalem.

50. Princes have no Right over the Bishops in Spirituals.

51. There is no Reason why either the Resormed or the Romanists abroad, should overmuch conside in Princes.

52. It plainly tends to the destruction of the Church to allow Princes a Power to deprive the Bishops of their Spiritual Office.

53. Princes act against their own Interest, when they offer violence to Religion.

54. 'Twould

Right Reverend,

Ou will undoubtedly lament our Condition, and that not without just reason, when fame shall inform mon Interest you of the Schism, wherewith the Church British Churches are at present torn asunder; with those but you will find a much greater Cause to abroad, lament, when you shall understand the reason reason suffiwhich alienates us, tho' most unwillingly, make them from our dearest Bowels in Christ, from our fear the ill Fathers and Brethren, so nearly bound to us in Confequen-Christian affinity, and which hinders the most ces of our dutiful respecters of the Clergy, from Com- Example. municating with them. The Cause we are now embark'd in, is in our Opinion the very cause of Peace and Concord. Therefore that we may obtain a folid Peace, we find our felves oblig'd to refuse a temporary deceitful one, and are forc'd to keep up an unhappy Difunion, till a firm and durable Concord, agreeable to the Principles of Christianity. shall be granted us. Now if this is the true State of our Case, you are no less concern'd than we; for which Reason, we beseech you fo far to lend us your Compassion, as to confider whether this pernicious Presedent may not affect your felves, and make your Unity and Communion precarious, and of no longer Duration than the Secular Magistrate shall think fit; especially fince the generality of Laymen are fo inclin'd to Libertinilin, and even when the very Vitals of Religion are struck at, as unconcern'd and secure, as if no danger threatned her; neither will you fuffer it to be in the Power of fuch Men. whether you shall keep up the Face of a Church or no, if they shall judge it convenient to maintain and espouse a Communion different from that which is truly Orthodox.

We may fafely affirm, that in this strange The Caufe Revolution of our Affairs, we have shown of the late our felves defirous of preferving the Unit Schifm by of the Church, as far as our Confciences wou'd to be impu- give us leave. And tho' we have religiously observ'd the Allegiance we swore to the ted to our Crown, yet this did not hinder us from Bishors. We were not moved at the general defection of our Brethren from the received Doctrines of our Church, concerning passive Obedience, and Non-reliffance; whatever pretence there was of taking up Arms. The Scandal given us in the public Prayers did not affect us, while no conditions of Communion were imposed upon us, that obliged us to give our affent to them. We were not concern'd at the Calumnies these Jurors drew upon themfelves, being fatisfied we our felves gave no occasion for them. The Severity of the new Laws enacted against us, as little difturbed us, altho' they deprived us of our Right and Liberties, for no other reason, but because we strictly adhered to the old Constitution of our Country. Thus we did not fuffer our felves to be feduced from our Duty, either by our own Passions, the provocations of the adverse party, and Cruelty of our Persecutors. We patiently endured whatever only incommoded our Bodies and Fortunes, and while we thought there were hopes of Salvation in the Communion of our Adversaries, we quietly continued in it. And as we did not depart from it our felves, so neither did our faithful Bishops command us to leave it. to far were they from enjoyning us any fuch thing, that they did nothing that might furnish us with the least pretence of making a Separation. There were no Ecclesiastical Censures folminated against Revolters; no Episcopal Deprivations issued out against those that had fallen from the Doctrine of the Church; nay, they did not exert their Authority

But this admirable patience and temper of our Prelates, had no other effect upon our Adversaries, than to make them despise it; and those very Men, who by the Holy Canons of the Church were most liable to Ecclesiastical Censure, were the first that began it. into the Sees Nor did they stop here: Lay Judges took upon them to pass Ecclesiastical Cenfures; and fuch as had never taken the most inferiour Orders of the Church, prefumed to th: Lay Po- deprive the Bishops of theirs. This may hurt the temporal Estates of the Bishops, but can never affect the Consciences of Subjects; for Christ has laid no Obligation upon us, to affert the Legal Rights of Bishops, in opposition to the Magistrate; but certainly hehas obliged us to affert those Rights, which he himself bestow'd upon the Church, in order to preserve it under Persecution; and which no earthly Power ever gave, the gave, or was able to give. And yet the violence of our Adverfaries proceeded fo far! Our Reverend Fathers were driven at last from the very cure of Souls; Altars oppolite to theirs erected, and Bishops of an adverse party, thrust into their places. Tho they were alive, their Seats were filled, and fill'd by Collegues, before they were vacant, before their Predecessors were deprived of Episcopal Power by Bishops, who had authority to do it, and indeed, were not removed by any Power whose Sentence was to be ratified in Heaven, least GOD shou'd own those for rightful Bishops, who were only expell'd by humane Violence. Upon this Account we looked upon the Obedience we ow'd them to be still vali'd, nor cou'd we transfer it to their Successors who had departed from Catholic Unity, from Christ himself, and all his Benefits, according to the Doctrine of St. Cyprian's age. We found our felves there fore reduced to this necessity, that if we had any regard for theSalvation of ourSouls, we cou'd not keep our ancient Communion with our former Fathers and Brethren; but on the other Hand, ought rather to break it off, since GOD is to be preferr'd to all Fathers and Brethren whatever.

And now, most worthy Arbitrators, we appeal to your Judgment, whether we have Our Bedone any thing which can in the least seem re- hoiour to pugnant to the Spirit of Peace and Unity? he jurged by the Dostr ne But we appeal to you upon this Condition, of the Pri-That you really be, what we suppose you are, minite true Lovers of the Catholic Peace, and Pri- Charch.

You cannot approve of any other Peace in particular Churches, than what contributes to that of the whole Catholic Church; neither will you think it worth your while to liften to any other Umpire concerning this Peace, than the Catholic, and Primitive Church. To deal plainly with you, only that Reformation among you, can be esteem'd true and justifia ble, which tries the errours of the Church in later Ages, by the Touchstone of that Church, which we are fure was the pureft of all: And you cannot but acknowledge the Primitive Church, which we have chosen for our Judge, to have been the pureft; at leaft, you have the greatest certainty of her purity. Tis true, Churches of a younger Date may be pure, but 'twas impossible the Primi tive Church should be other than so, especially while the agreed with her felf in the belief of those Traditions she received from the Apoftles. The Arguments of Irenaus, Tertullian and Vincentim Lirinensis centre here, which are above all exception, fince they appeal to that Primitive Antiquity, to which Irenau and Tertullian still refer themselves, and not to the middle, and lowest ages of the Church, by which the Romanists, who defend the Papal Usurpations, wou'd rather chuse to be judged. I will pass over here, what I have sufficiently discuss'd in another place, viz. my late Differtations upon renaus concerning the faith of the first Ages in deriving their Traditions. Thus you fee our Caufe must be tried before other Judges than your felves, altho' you fincerely Respect and Honour that Antiquity which we are here commending; however we thought no Church fo proper to decide and extinguish the late Controversies among us as the Primitive. She was averse to that bandying of Parties and Factions fo predominant in these times, and came pure from Christ and his Apostles, and was fuch as GOD wou'd have her. Riches and secular Pride, the Seeds of all Mischiefs, has not as yet appeared, or had they appear'd never fo plentifully, they cou'd not in fo fhort a time fo far corrupt the whole Church, that the cou'd confent to establish Errors. But the Severe Discipline of those ages, every where maintain'd and flourishing, is a plain Demonstration, that she was in an entire State of Health and Vigour. The same is evident by GOD's watchful care of her in all places, confirming the Discipline of his Church, by the most manifest Tokens of his presence. This likewise appears by the lively zeal of her Professors, which easily overcame, and triumph'd over all opposition from the World, the Flesh, the Devil, nay, and even frem from the Secular Magistrate, tho' at the same they preserved all due Obedience to him, and a most Christian Temper of Mind. Even at this Day, those that disagree among themfelves in other Points, confent to pay a due respect and honour to this Church, for which Reason tis the readiest Course can be propofed, that all Controversies shou'd be decided by her Arbitration, much rather I am fure, than by that of any modern Church, be the never fo Famous. Now the easiest Method of procuring Catholick Peace is, That particular Churches shou'd make mutual Allowances to one another, for the fake of Peace, and That all should not be compell'd to submit to the Terms of any one particular Church: Nay, that on Church shou'd yield to another, but rather to her felf, that the when pure, might ferve as a Rule to her that is corrupted. And this wou'd foon be effected, if every Church took care to return to the Primitive State. Now no shame for past Mistakes, nor envy or emulation of any forreign Example ought to hinder the bringing about of so defired an end. And thus our modern Churches will return with all alacrity to that Primitive Concord of the Catholic Church, if they revive, and as it were recall fromBanishment, those Doctrines, upon which that ancient Concord was built, and unanimoully agree to threw off those Scandals which have lately grole, and are found to destructive to Peace, of not longs is tovo because Warid: the Heln, the Devil unt, end even

Thus we have made bold to interpofe these Cautions to you, which we suppose you'll And nor by be so far from disregarding, that on the o-the Prejective of the hand you'll countenance them by your received oown fuffrage, especially if you prefer Primi-pinions of tive Antiquity to whatever Prejudices you the Modern may have imbibed from any Faction or Party. Churches, Otherwise I confess there are Innovations now to be found in all Churches, which will foon turn the Reverence of Primitive Antiquity out of doors, if they were once made a Standard by which we shou'd Govern our selves: Nay, we complain that tis along of these Innovations that that Unity of Catholic Communion, which so eminently flourish'd among the Primitive Christians, comes to be destroy'd. Upon this account we appeal to those Judges, who will allow their own Communions and Churches to be examin'd by the primitive Church, I mean in all things neceffary for advancing and maintaining Catholic Peace and Unity. As for what relates to other matters, we are of opinion that all contemporary Churches were invested with a fufficient Right and Authority of their own in their own feveral Diffricts. Let us therefore enquire what was that Unity of the Ca. tholic Church in those earliest and happiest times; as also upon what substantial Reasons 'twas establish'd: By following this conduct, we shall best be able to discover whether we have acted any thing contrary to that Unity, and whether we have omitted any thing on our part that was necessary to preserve it.

I am not at all concern'd that the Rabbines are of a different opinion, who understand little or nothing of the Apostolical times, and 'tis probable to me that St. James the Prefident of the Christian College, had this in his eye when he inscribed his Epistle to the Twelve Tribes which were scatter'd abroad; because the High Priest of the Jews had the Names of all the Tribes written in his Pettoral; and if we may believe * Epiphanin, St. James himfelf * Har. 29. wore the Pontifical Lamina or Plate on his 4. and 78. Why not then the Petteral in 14 like manner? However this is certain, that he had so many Apostles for his Collegues according to the number of the Tribes; fo that every Tribe had a particular Apostle to represent them. This is the Reason perhaps why we read that the place of Judas the Betrayer was filled up, and not of the other Apostles who died afterward, and not only to fulfill the Prophecy of the RoyalPlalmist mention'd by the Apostle, who advised that Election. Indeed the very number of the Tribes feem'd to countenance it, fince two of them were reckon'd to Joseph: however upon no pratence whatever were they allowed to exceed Thirteen. But the Apostles differ'd from the Fewifb High Priests in this respect, that the both of them were esteem a for their Extrathion and Birth, yet among the Christians.

Now the same Apostic proves that an Everlatting Prietthood was plainly different from the Levitical, and that by Arguments deduced from the Old Tipament it felf. He likewise proves that this everlasting Priestheod vieter fails with our Lord than with the Levilled Governors of the Temple of Jaulelen. Nay, Phile himself which which the Apostles themselves were tindured with before they embraced the Christian Faith: And therefore when they own'd our Lord Jesus Christ to be the hayos, it was but reason they should likewise own him to be an Everlasting and Celestial High Priest. The Reasonings of the New Testament take this for granted all along, but especially those of the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews. Upon this account it was, that under the Christian Dispensation these were to be invested with the High Priestbefore those who cou'd only boast themselves to be descended from the High Priest's Family among the Jews. Now why this first College of the Church of Jerusalem did not bear the common name of Aexagas or High Priests, after the manner of the Archieratical College of the Jews, is owing to the Platonical way ing so much used in that Age. The Platonists afferted that all Originals were only one; but that the Copies were many. 'tis after this manner that the Author of the Epiftle to the Hebrews argues all along : He proves the Mosaical Priesthood to have been Temporary by this very Argument, That they were many Priests, because they were nos suffer d to continue by reason of death, Ch. 7. 23. Now no succession or vicissitude can befall an Everlasting Priest, because he alone suffices for all Ages, the Son who is confecrated for evermore, Verf. 28. And therefore they acknowledged no Copartnership or Collegiue in this Everlasting Priesthood, which might rationally enough be acknowledged ni the Jewish College, wherein the visible hoyos was never reckon'd, but which wholly confifted of Men partakers of the same Nature, who might therefore be very justly accounted Members of the fame College. There was likewise another Reason according to the Platonic Hypothesis why the Originals were not reckon'd with the Copies, and that was, because they placed Truth only in the Originals; and therefore these Secondary Priests, compared with the Everlafting Priest, had not been accounted true Priests. There was no Reason therefore that they shou'd bear the same name, who had not the fame thing fignified by that name. And so since the visible heyes himself was the first Collegue of the new Priesthood, it was but decent that the rest should abstain from this name, lest they should seem to challenge a parity from the Co-partnership of the Adyos. Upon which account they thought it fitting to bestow fome modester name upon their College, which should rather intimate that they were the Ministers of Christ than his Collegues. Thus we fee St. Pant uses the name of Servant and Apostle indifferently; as fignifying the same thing. Thus St. Jude calls himself the Brother of James; but tho' he was truly related to our Lord, yet he calls himself not his Kinsman but Servant. But

But because if compar'd with Christ they were not to be called Priefts, yet it does not follow from thence that they were not really fuch; for the same Reason might be made use of against the Jewish Priests, who are nevertheless called Priests in the Holy Scriptures, as far as that name properly belongs to Men. Thus there is no reafon why the Apostles shou'd not take the fame courfe under the Christian Oeconomy, which the Levitical Priests did formerly under the Jewish, and confer all the Benefits of the Priesthood, although they forbore the name for the Reason abovemention'd. The same (a) Apostle tells (a) Rom. us, that God alone is Wife; and yet 16. 27. he owns himself to have (b) Wisdom. (b) I Cor. The ancient Christians in (c) Eusebius (c) Hist. would have none but Christ call'd a Mar- Eccles. 5. tyr, yet that hinder'd them not from be-Cap. 2. ing call'd by the same name. Only God is (4) 1 Tim. (d) Immortal; yet humane Souls may in an inferior sense be likewise call'd Immortal. Such forms of expression are sometimes used and sometimes avoided, according to the capacity of the Hearers, and the decorum of the Speakers, and yet the Sentence in both places is confonant with it felf. And thus the High Priests and Apostles, tho' going by different names, VII. were certainly the fame. The Kinf-

them from elsewhere, in order to equal the number of the Tribes. Whether thefe last were of Aaron's Race or no, we find nothing in the Monuments of Antiquity by which we may determine the Question, but that they were all of Jewish extraction there is no reason for us to doubt, since before the Affair of Cornelius, it was not known whether any other than Jews were to be received into the new Peculium. Now it manifestly appears that the Kinfmen of our Lord polfelled the first Rank among the Apostles. Thus St. Paul, when he Argues from the Authority of the Apostles, allows the first Rank to those that were the Brethren of the Lord. Have we not power to lead a young Sifter, a Wife, as well as other Apostles, and as the Brethren of the Lord, and Cephas ? 1 Cor. 9. 4 Unless I am mistaken, he means by his other Apostles, those of Jerusalem, as they are oppos'd to the Apostles of the Gentiles, to himfelf, and Barnabas. In like manner he appeals to the Authority of the Apostles, as the chief Judges of the Christian Doctrine, Gal. c.1.v.17, and 19. and c. 2. v. 9. where in the first place he sets down the Brethren of the Lord, and that before Cephas, who used to be reckon'd first of the other Apostle that were not Brethren; however he places him before St. John, Gal. 2. 9. whom he dos the honour to reckon among the Pillers of the Church, because he vvas in a special manner beloved by our Lord. Thus 'tis manifest beyond all contradiction, that the same Apostle sets down St. James, when the

he was Bishop of Jerusalem, before St. Peter; Gal. 2. 9. and that he possess'd the first Rank, in the Council of Ferujalem, St. Peter himself not excepted. For St. James speaks last in that Assembly, and the Decree of the Council palles according to his Sentence, both which are undeniable Marks of one that presided in a publick Assembly, according to the Roman Customs prevailing in that Age. Lastly, 'tis evident that while any of our Lord's Family were remaining, they chose the Bishops of Jerusalem always from thence. There were Three Apostles whom St. Paul in the abovemention'd place of the Galatians, 2. 9. calls Pollars; for the eminent. Rank which they held among the Apostles of their own Order. Glemens Alexandrinus affirms that our Lord trusted them with the wars or Knowledge, as if he confided wholly in them, and by their means discover'd himfelf to the other Apostles; in like manner as the Rabbins pretend the Oral Tradition of the Law, to have descended from Moses to Aaron, from Aaron to the Sons of Aaron, and lastly from his Sons to the Great Sanedrim. for this years or Mystic meaning of the Law, which was to be imparted to none but to the Disciples of the first admission, exactly anwer'd this Oral Tradition, and 'tis in this. sense that the truly Apostolical Author of the Epistle of Barnabas uses the Word. However this years may perhaps more properly be referr'd to the Voice that was heard t the Transfiguration, for these Three were then prefent, and none but they, when this Viace

And thus we may fee that this Tradition of Clemens is not wholly to be rejected, fince these very A. pottles, whom he mentions, infift to openly upon it; however 'twas necessary that our . Lord shou'd communicate this years to those Apostles, before his Resurrection, and not after it, as Clemens supposed. We find like wife in Clemens, that by the Suffrages of these Three Apostles, the Primacy was allow'd to St. James, that he might preside over the Apostolical Colledge. Now this James must certainly be a different Person rom that James, who was the Brother of St. John, and Son of Zebedee, fince he was the Son of Alphens, or Cleopas. Thus we fee, that in the Writings of that James, whole Epistle we have, there is not the least Foot Acp of those Words, which we have observed to be so plain and positive in the Writings of the other three Apostles; nay, the above mention'd words of Clemens, manifestly thou that Peter that James the Bishop of Jerusalem was not one of those Three, fince he obtain'd that Honour by their Votes; however Clemens feems to have mistaken the meaning of those that acquainted him with this Tradition, fince he makes James the Just one of these three, whom he afterwards affirms to have been Bishop of Jerusalem; fer this Reason, as may be supposed, because in the Apostleship, there was so great a Regard had to Birth and Extraction. Nor did it happen otherwise in the next Election Simeon, the Son of Cleopas, wherein * Eusebins *Hist. Eccl. makes mention of the Suffrages of the L.3. C.116 Apostles, the Disciples, and Kinsmen, from some Report or Tradition that was handed down to his Age. These two Elections so exactly agreeing with one another, leave us no room to think that any thing happen'd accidentally in either of them. Thus it appears, that the Kinsmen of our Lord, were the first of the Apostles; and they that fill'd the remaining Number of Twelve, were chosen, as I suppose, out of the Second Order of the Clergy of Jerusalem, who were reckon'd among the Common Order of the Presbyters or Elders. To this we may not unproperly apply St. Feter's calling himfelf a Fellow Elder of the Elders ; I Fp. v. 1. and St. John's giving himself the Name of Elder, in his Second and Third Epistle; if so be he was the same with the Apostle. 'Tis certain St. Peter has done it in that very Epistle, of which we never find that it was doubted by the Church, whether it was his or no? C 2 NOW

Now this still show'd the sincerity of that humility, wherein the Writers of those times fo much delighted, that they profess themselves to be unworthy of the Apostie. ship, altho they were the chief of the Apoftles that were not Kinfmen; for this Reafon, because they were chosen into the Apostolical Office, out of the inferior Class of Presbyters, to which they had not been advanced. if among the Kinfmen there had been faithful Believers enough to have made up the Num-'Tis a plain Case, we find nober Twelve. thing of this in the Epistles of St. James and St. Jude, who were both Apostles and Kinsmen. And this they did, while the Apostle ship was respected with the highest Honour; for fo long as this Honour continued, and they lay under no necessity of extolling their Office, even the chief Apoltles commended their modesty by professing themselves to be unworthy of fogreat an Honour, and avoided the envy of it, as much as in them lay. Thus St. Paul reckons himself the least of the Apostles, and not worthy to be call'd by the Name of Apostle, who in other places does not deny himself to be equal to the chiefest Apostles. Thus St. Barnabas his Co-part'ner in the Apostleship of the Gentiles, makes the Apostles the most contemptible of Men. Thus not only St. Paul, but the two Kinfmen-Apostles, St. James and St. Jude, whom we have already shown to have been the first of that Order, call themselves the Servants of our Lord, more frequently than Apostles. And herein they acted conformably to the Example

Example and Precept of ourSaviour, that they who were the Lords of all shou'd to show their Humility, call themselves the Servants of all. So this was the first College of the Christian Clergy of Jerusalem, which answer'd exactly to the chief Sacerdotal College of

The Second College of the Church of Jerusalem went under the same Name as the Second College of the Jewish Sanedrim, I lege of the mean that of Pre byters. 'Tis probable that Christian there were Twenty Four of them in this Presbyters f. Tewish College, for the same Number of Jerusalem, Elders in the Apocalyps, seem in my Opinion other to allude to them. In that place the Church took the like of Jerusalem is described, as it bore an exact Pattern. resemblance to the Sanedrim there: Otherwife that Number has nothing fo remarkable in it, as that we can draw any Conclusions from thence. Now the Sanedrim had the fame Number of Sacerdotal as well as Levitical Families that paid their daily Attendance : And in these Families, no less than in those of the other Tribes, according to the ancient Patriarchal right, the eldest Born Sons of the chief Families always prefided, who are called in the Holy Scriptures אבות i. e.Chiefs These, because they owed the first Rank to of the their Primogeniture, were therefore called Fathers. new Guregos; for the Hellenists made use of this word to fignifie this Prerogative of Birth. Neither was it at all necessary, that one shou'd be well advanc'd in years to be a Presbyter of this fort; 'twas enough if he was the Heir, and confequently the first begotten Son owing to their Birth, therefore we find the Name of Judge and Presbyter fignifie the fame. Thus we read in the Hiftory of Susanna, v. 50. That Daniel the Young Man. when he was made a Judge, had the Honour of Eldership given him by GOD. After this Pattern therefore the Church of Ferula. lem employ'd as many Presbyters as the Sanedrim, that they might answer the Number of the daily Services, and that the Church of Jerusalem might enjoy the same Privileges over the Churches abroad, as the Sanedrin there did over the Synagogues. Now from this Church, all other Churches abroad took their Pattern of Presbyters, and feem to have done it at the time when the Christians made a Separation from the Jewish Synagogues, and had particular Meetings of their own to celebrate the Divine Service; but how far this Separation was afterwards carry'd, the Reader may satisfie himself elsewhere. Now Laicor, in if this was the Original of the Christian Presbyters, 'tis certain there is no pretence left to Lay-Elders (fuch as our moden have devised) for these Presbyterians EDRMeets, or daily Services, were only perform'd by the Sacerdotal Families. I confess indeed that we find mention made of the People in the Sanedrim of Jerusalem, as the Scribes of the People, St. Matt. c. 2. 4. and the Flders of the People. But by Aa's there, we are not to understand the Commonalty of Ifrael, but only the Levitical Body, which alone was concern'd in those daily Service. and bore no manner of Resemblance to our Lay-Christians. But whatever this Andi was, 'tis certain they had no place in the Christian Councils of Jerusalem; for the Author of the Apocalypse, mentions no more than Twenty Four Elders in the Christian Assemblies, altho' the Levites likewise had their רשי אכות, and indeed those Christian Presbyters, in the Apocalyple, were wholly different from the Presbyters of the Levites. The former fit upon Thrones, adorn'd with Crowns, which are the undoubted Badges of a Royal Priesthood (for so 'tis usually call'd) and not of the Levites, whose Office it was to give their attendance, and wait; nor indeed was there any necessity to entertain fo great a Number of Waiters in Ecclesiastical Sacrifices of the Christians, wherein the everlasting Priesthood of the Gospel was employ'd. Besides, it might so happen that the Christians follow'd this Pattern of the Jews, as well in those Cities that were subject to the Metropolis, as in the Metropolitical City it felf. Now what this was, * Josephus, that excellent Historian, + Jos. Ant. may inform us, who introduces his Legislator, L. 4. of Levi, From this Passage we come to understand why the Evangelists some times call them Agxorres, Rulers, and fometimes need regon, Elders; fo that we were in the right, when we affirm'd the hace, people, as opposed to the "Aexorte, to be meant of the Levitical Body; and lastly that these Rulers of Cities upon whom the Levites attended, were no other *Jer. c.13. than Priefts. For we find in the * Prophets. that the Levites used to be consulted about Hag. 2.12. the Law; and that there lay an Appeal from Mal. 2.6,7. these Judges of Cities to the High Prieft. the Prophet, and the Senate, Josephus exprelly teaches us in the person of his Legislator in the place abovemention'd. Let them fend for Determination of Justice to the Holy City, and when the High Priest, the Prophet, and the Senate are affembled, let them judge according to equity. So we read this place now; but by the 17th Chapter of Deuteronomy, v. 9, 12. it appears, that instead of seconds, Prophet, we ought to read Keiths, Judge, if he was a different person from the High Priest; otherwise I won'd read o wai necount who is likewife a Prophet, and understand the Oracle of the High Priest by Vrim. However even in this Sense it will appear, that these Appeals were made from the Priefts to the High Prieft himself. Now these Levites, two of whom attended upon the Judges, were is envery unaras or Holy Scribes, as the learned Bernard has shown upon this place of Josephon; neither were they, in my Opinion, different from the Scribes of the People, mention'd in the Holy Scriptures, as we have already observed

Thus we shall come to know what were the Elders in every(a) Church, and in every(b) City, in (4) Acts. the History of the Apostles. Tis certain 14.23. and that (c) Gains, a Presbyter of Gidda, had a (b) Titus Deacon attending upon him, and nothing i.s. appears to the contrary, but that he might (c) cyprian have two; and therefore I am of the Opi-Ep. 34. nion that the Seven Deacons, whom Cornelius Edit. Oxon affirms to have been in the Church of Rome, and the Canon of Neocafarea in a (d) City, (d) Ep. ad of a pretty large extent, ought to be meant of Fabium those Deacons, whose proper Office it was to Antiowait upon the Bishop. For these were the apud bus. Eyes of the Bishop, and thus there were Hist. Eccl. Seven Men about the Kings of Perfia, who 1.6. c. 43. were call'd the Eyes of the King. These Gr. likewise answer'd the Ministring Spirits, who were also Seven in Number. However, I look upon these Attendants of the Bishops, to have been of a younger Date than these times, of which I am now Difcourfing.

Therefore, fince these Colleges, both of the Jewish, and Christian Clergy of Jerusalem follows that answer one another so exactly, we may easily in this first from thence conclude, that as all the Sy-Age of the nagogues of the Jews dispers'd over all the Aposties all World were under the Jewish Clergy of Je-Churches rusalem, so all the Christian Churches in the were Subject Universe were Subject to the Christian to that of Clergy of the same City. We have already ob-Jerusalem. served that an Appeal lay from the Presbyters of the inferiour Cities (for so they are call'd in the Old Testament) to the High Priest and Sanedrim of Jerusalem: In like manner

For then there was no Valentinus there, nor Marcion, nor any of the rest, who seduced their followers unto Error. How much greater and nobler are these Commendations, which this Apostolical Writer bestows upon the Church of Fernfalem, than what the Romanifts have pretended to fay in behalf of the boofted Superiority of the City of Rome. By the Voices of the Apostles he does not mean Iren. 3.c. 8. the decifive Sentence of the Church of Rome, wherein there was no College of Apo ftles ; but that of the Church of Jerusalem. He tells us, that this was the Church from which all other Churches derive their beginning, the Church of home it felf not excepted, which is fo much magnifyed and reverenced. He affirms that this was the common City of all the Citizens of the New Testament, in the same sente as Agrippa supposed Jerusalem, to be the common City of all the Jews. He calls it the Metropolis, fo that consequently all other Christian Cities, even Rome it felf, were only Colonies fprung from it, and therefore, no more to be believed, as to the Origine of Christianity, than Colonies are when any dispute happens about the Origine of a Metropolitan City. This, and not Rome, he affures us was the City, whose Citizens were to be reckon'd Citizens, not only of the Old, but the New Testament. He likewise speaks of an outward City of Jerusalem, intimating thereby, that all the Rights of Christianity were to be fetched from thence; so that even the Christian City of Rome it felf had no other power power to make a Citizen of Christ, than

Colonies have of bestowing this privilege upon fuch as are born in them, of being accounted Citizens of the Metropolitan City, and to enjoy all its Rights and Immunities. And this he does after the Platonic manner of arguing in the New Testament, so much then in Vogue. Nay, the Apostle of the Gentiles, describes the Rights of Christianity, under the Name of a Polity, and a lasting City. Gal. 4. 26. Neither does he mean any other City, but that of Jerusalem, which he acknowledges to be the Mother of all Christians. Thus we see that this Apostle, as well as Agrippa, and St. Irenaus, owns the Metropolitical Right of that City. I am not Ignorant that this is to be understood of the Heavenly Jerusalem above, and yet this does not exclude the earthly Jarusalem, if we consider the Platonic way of reafoning fo much used by the Apostles, for the Symbols even of the Old Testament were suppofedfo far to conferHeavenly and Mystic Rights, that whoever wanted those Symbols, was believed to have no right to the heavenly: And this manner of arguing was chiefly used by the Christians, who turn'd the Mystic reasonings of the Jews, to their own ad-Thus the Names of those Persons that were enter'd into the Registers of the Church, were supposed to be written down in St. John c. all the Mystic Rights belonging to it: For tis undeniably evident, that those frequent Karvovias or Communions, whereof we find so often mention in Coins, Inscriptions, and other Monuments of Antiquity, are to be refer'd to the Rights of Cities. And this Rule of arguing was so much in vogue, that on the other Hand they concluded that whoever were destitute of these exteriour Symbols, were upon that very Score rendered uncapable of enjoying the mystic and heavenly Benefits, arising from them. Nay, the whole Discipline of the Church, which flourish'd at that Time, was built upon these Reasonings; for the true Reason why People fear'd the Censures of the Church, was because they belived there was no Mystic Communion without an Outward and Visible one. Thus our Lord himself teaches us, that those that are not regenerated by Baptisin st. John e. are to be shut out of the Kingdom of Hea- 3. v. 2, 50 ven; and fuch as were forbidden the Euchariffical Bread, were supposed to have no hopes of tasting the Heavenly. They that embraced a different Communion from the Apostles, cou'd expect no Communion with the Father or Son: and St. John the Apostle, in his first Canonical Epistle, which I mentiond above, plainly intimates, that the contrary thereof is to be fear'd. And therefore, if we are to be govern'd by this Rule, the consequence is plain, that there is no hope for us, of obtaining the heavenly ferusalem, but by the means of the terrestrial one. obtain his Desite, before he had been admitted into the earthly one. I confess that the Apostle teaches us, Gal. 4. 25. that the ferufalem, which now is, is not at all to be effeem'd; but he does not barely mean the Terrestial one, which, as we have already, feen, was common to both Peculiums, but only that which had no fight to the Heavenly Jerusalem, which rather boasted of Abraham's Flesh, than of his Faith, and confequently was a degenerate Off-spring. For this was the Plea of the Jems, those irreconcilable Enemies to the Name of Christ, which he here opposes; but he is so far from flighting and difregarding the City of the New Peculium, that on the other hand, he makes it absolutely necessary for taining the Rights of the Heavenly City. The fame may be evidently gathered by the Eyner fels pies, or grafting, mention'd in Rom. c. 9. v. 17, 19. which makes us Partakers of the Rost and Fatness of the Natural Olive; he means the Promises made to the Patriarchs. to all which, we who were fprung from the Wild Olive, had by our Original no manner of Title; for 'tis certain, that those Promifes were made to the Seed of the Patriarchs: And therefore, to make us capable of enjoying that Privilege, 'twas necessary, that tike Foreign Branches, we should be Ingrafted into their Trunk, that fo we might be counted Ifraelites, and descended from the Race of the Patriarchs. And this was unquestionably true, according to this Hypothelis of ours; for the Church of Ferusalem was wholly composed of Jews, who were Israelites, both by Faith and Descent, Acts c. 2. v. 49-0.3.v.25. and therefore fince no admission to Salvation was allow'd to any other Churches, unless they were united into one Body and Stemm with that of Ferusalem, in true property of Speech, this was rightly call'd an inorating; And this makes it plainly appear, why even Rom. c. t. the Apostle of the Gentiles always allows the v. 16.02. first place to the Jews, when he comes to v. 9. c. 3. reckon up the Rights of the Peculium, and v. I. that not only because they were first to be cail'd into the Peculium, but because that in the New Peculium, as it was now constituted, they were to be reckon'd first. For the Gentiles came to them and their City, and not the Tews to any City of the Gentiles. Laftly, From hence we come to understand. why * Clemens Romanue speaks always of the Ancestors of the Jews in such a manner, as if he himself had been descended from them; and yet his very Name fufficiently shows that he was a Roman, and a Gentile. Since this was therefore the true Stated During this Affairs, we may easily infer, that during all Space, the this Interval, the Christians had only one Ch. of Jeru: Principle of Unity, the Bishop of Fernsalem, falem, and after the same manner as the Jews, the never fo far distant from one another, had tooked after one Principle of Unity, viz. the High Pries, the Difci- who perform'd all Religious Ceremonies in pline of the the Name of them all at Jerusalem. For all Churches did answer the Synagogues, which did not constitute intire Bodies by themfelves, but only some smaller Portions of the City of Jerusalem; for there were abundance of Synagogues, even in Jerusalem it felf, among which the Synagogues of Foreign Cities, at how great a distance soever separated from them were reckon'd by a common right with the Jerusalem Synagogues; after the same Example unless I am mistaken, which made Augustin Cafar divide all Italy into Fourteen Regions, according to the Number of Regions belong. ing to the City of Rome, with this Delign perhaps, that hereby they should know in what Region of the City they were to give their Votes; for the Italians had long before been admitted to Vote in City Affairs, and Suetonius informs us, that Augustus had devised Aug.c. 46. a New Method of Voting for the City Magistrates. Now the Christian Churches differed from the Synagogues in this Particular, that whereas the Colonies of the Church of

Jerusalem enjoy'd the Rights of the Tentple, together with the particular Rights of the Synagogues; the Jewish Synagogues had no share at all in the Rights of the Temple: The reason of which Difference proceeded from the Nature of the Chrifian Eucharistical Sacrifice, which was tied o no certain place; and in this respect differ'd mightily from the example of the Tewish Sacrifice. Nay, even in the Right t felf of the Eucharistical Sacrifice, the Church of Jerusalem seems to have enoy'd some particular Prerogatives, at least for a time. 'Tis probable that the Power of the Ordinary Rectors in the Foreign Churches increased by little and little, and that perhaps by permission of the Church of Jerusalem; and this must have happen'd of necessity if the Angels in the Apocalypse were truly Bishops, of which I will give you my opinion hereafter. But in the Primitive times, scarce any other Persons exercised any power over the Churches, that were subject to the Church of Jerusalem, but the Ministers of the Church of Ferusalem, that were dispatched from thence on purpose to manage their Affairs in the remotest parts. St. Justin Dial. cum the Martyr calls those that were fent Tryph. from the Synagogues, "Avdegs EHAENTES, or Chosen Men; and in the New Testament we read of certain Ministers of the Church of Jerusalem that were endenter how destoxiuxouteror, i. e. It was but reasonable and just that all these should be Ministers of that Church, which alone had the Care of all other Churches: And to fpeak plainly, none but those in the Primitive times looked after the Discipline of other Churches, even after their separation from the Synagogues, at which time other Churches had their proper Presby. teries belonging to themselves, and that in every City, They were fo far taken up in performing the publick Offices of Churches, that they supervised no part at all of Discipline or Government; neither do we any where read of any Pref. byters deprived by these Presbyteries of Churches whenfoever they deferved it, nor of any new ones substituted into the places of those that were dead; nor likewife of any one banish'd from Communion, nor restored to it by the Decre of these Presbyteries. The very History of the Apostles ascribes the Institution of the first Presbyteries to the Apostles: Clem Rom. Clemens Romanus, an Apostolical Author,

Now he expresly affirms, that all the Presbyters or Bishops of the Church of Corinth were made by one of these two. He does not mean all the Apostles, but only those by whom his own Church, in whose name he writes, viz. that of Rome, and that likewise to which he writes, viz. that of Corinth, was founded, namely St. Peter, and St. Paul. St. Faul himself owns that both of them were concern'd in planting the Church of Corinth, 1 Cor. 1. 12. and the same is testified by St. Clemens himfelf; N. 27. Nay, St. Clemens affirms, that they joyntly labour'd even in the Church of Rome, whose filence, as it was believed, induced the Learned Spanheim to maintain the contrary Opinion, viz. That St. Peter had no hand at all in founding the Church of Rome; and yet in this Epistle St. Clemens himself affirms, that a great multitude of the Elect were gathered to two of the Apostles at least, who suffering by many Stripes and Trials, through their zeal became a most eminent Testimony AMONG US. N. 6. Now if the Romans that were gather'd by the Apostles suffer'd, what reafon, I befeech you, have we to doubt, that the Apostles, to whom they were gather'd, Preach'd at Rome? For this very gathering, to the Apostles sufficiently shows that this Church was erected by them, as D 2

The Multitude of the City was divided, and some were for the Jews, and some for the Apostles. true, Junius, who first publish'd the Epistle of St. Clemens, supplied the Name of St. Peter, the last Letters of whose Name were plainly to be feen in the Manuscript, but no one doubts but that this Supplement is right. And this helps us to understand the Words of St. Clemens, which the furly morose Censurer of this Apostolical Writer, cited by Monsieur le Clerk, did not understand, wherein he plainly intimates, that these fame Apostles were equally Founders of his own Church, as also of that of Corinth; so then 'tis clear, St. Clemens meant that the first Presbyters of the Church of Corinth were instituted by the Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul; however, with this qualification, that others who were substituted into the room of the Dead, were by no means to be insulted and despised by the Schismatics, as if they had obtain'd their Power, by an inferiour Authority, than their Predecessors had done; for he expresly tells us, that the Apoftles themselves, who were the Founders of that Church, forefaw the Contentions that would happen about the Episcopacy. which reason, says he, foreseeing this perfectly before hand, they instituted Governors, and afterwards gave a supplemental Law, that when they should die, the means not the Apostles, but the Presbyters that were instituted by the ApoltOri-

Now the drift of all his Discourse is, to show that the authority of the fubflituted Presbyters was equal to that of the first Presbyters, which had its Original from the same Apostles, for that they, when they first erected that Church, took care of the Succession, and prescribed the very same Rules to regulate it, by which it had been continued down to his own time; that consequently this very Authority of these eminent Men in substitu. ting of fuccessor, flow'd from the same A postles, fo that none but they had a Right to chuse them. Perhaps too, these who years were sent by these very Apostles, after they had left Corinth. Thus we find St. Paul left Titus at Creet, that he might ordain Elders in every City, as eya ou du raga put v, i. e. as I have appointed thee. Here we see the Power of appointing was proper to the Apostles, as Ignation likewise affirms, who makes it intirely the same, as to the Succession of Government, as Clemens Romanus makes it; and therefore the Word workin used by Clemens, whatever he might mean by it, must of necessity signify some such appointment or regulation of the Succession. Tis true indeed, he might perhaps mean an Inheritance by it, as also some precepts about substituting Heirs into the place of the deceased. But I am rather inclined to believe, that he meant the Second Orders, which the Apostles might leave behind them, relating to the Succession, as they were opposed to their first Precepts, at the D 3

He observes that Moses had provided for the Priesthood by Materayueva EV TES iEPRIS BIChois and verquodethuere i. e. By his Regulations and Laws fet down in the Holy Bible; and therefore we must pass the fame Judgment upon these Regulations of the Apostles, who in this Case exercised that legislative Power and Authority, which they had over all Churches; and by this Construction, St. Clemens, will mean the fame thing by Envoyed, which Plato did by Exivouis, viz, an additional or accessary Law to others already instituted, such as was that of Deuteronomy with Moses, which I Philo fometimes calls by the Name of + Phil. de Extrouis, as being an Addition to that of rer. div. Sinai; for after the same manner was the 503. 515. Law, that regulated the Succession, added de Creat to that Law, by which the Church of Co-Princip. P. rinth had been founded, altho' I own it may be call'd 'Emivour, in the same sense as we call the Gospel a new Law, because it is an Addition to that of Moses. 'Tis certain the word of that work, or gave, is a Law Term, as for instance, that Man is said Legem dare, who enjoyns any thing upon others, by his own Authority; and therefore this Law relating to the Succession, ought properly to be ascribed to the Apostles. So then in this Interpretation, the ¿Máyiµoi were the Legates or Vicars of the Apostles, and whatever they tranacted is to be ascribed to the Apostles themselves, or atleast of the Supreme College of the Apostles. Therefore 'tis probable they were Itinerary Preachers dispatched from Jerusalem, to supervise their Affairs at Corinth, and confequently the same with the EHAEHTEI, for 'tis plain, that the Presbyters, belonging to that Church, had not as yet a right to Substitute Successors into the places of the dead, nor yet to Excommunicate, or Absolve, or inflict Punishments for any irregularity. Otherwise, one can hardly imagine how fuch gross Disorders could have crept among the Corinthians, when St. Paul writ his Epistle to them; Neither had he advised them to Mourn, I Cor. 5. 2. that their incest might be taken away from among them; for the very mention of mourning, supposes that it was in the power of others to take it away; and 'tis more natural to believe that the Presbyters wou'd take it away, and that the Apostle wou'd exhort them to do it, if they had been invested with a sufficient power to have executed it. We find that of St. Cyprian, in the case tEpist. 3. of an obstinate Deacon, advises Rogatianus Edit. Oxon the Bishop to bring him to condign Punishment for that difrespect shown to his dignity. On the other Hand, the Apostle, here, in the Case of Incest, rather takes all the Discipline upon himself than the Presbyters. For I, fays he, as absent in Body, but present in Spirit, have judged already, as tho' I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed. Neither does Clemens express himself otherwise. Writing to the same Corinthans. we read of no censures of Presbyters, denounced against such Schismatics as grew infolent and proud upon the pretence of spiritual Gifts; neither does Clemens feem to advise them any thing tending that way. In that Age, none but these Itinerary Legates of the Church of Jerusalem, threaten offenders with Ecclefiastical censures. St. Paul threatens the Rod, and so does St. John the Presbyter, if he is the same with the 'Tis true, the Arguments by which Apostle. Mau . the Agussai of the Lacedamonians, who et Vales. were Legates fent from Sparta, to the for- in not reign Cities that belonged to the Spartan Maussac. Jurisdiction, and exactly resembled the Existing of the Athenians, who were not chosen by the Cities over which they presided, but were dispatched thither from Athens. And indeed, St. Peter the Apostle, has long ago observed that the Hellenists call'd the Apostleship, by the Name of emononi, or Bishoprick, Ads 1. 20, 25. There is likewife another fignification of the Word, that agrees with the place well enough, when it fignifies the same with Myssig, i. e. a Woer, which may very properly be applied to the Office of an Apostle, for after this manner does St. Paul deliver himself: I have espoused you to one Husband, that I may present you as a chast Virgin to Christ, 2 Cor. 11. 2. Now I can affign no rea. fon what necessity there was that St. John the Apostle shou'd be call'd to discharge this trust, if the Presbyteries of every Church had Authority sufficient to have performed the same. If they had not a fufficient Authority, 'tis highly probable that those Angels of the Churches we read of in the Apocalypse, were different from the Presbyteries instituted in those places; for we find find they are invested with an adsolute Power of Government: To them alone is ascribed all the Praise for Discipline, when it was strictly maintain'd, and they alone are upbraided with Neglect, when it came to be remis. Both which they had been charg'd with undeservedly, if the Presbyteries of those places had enjoy'd any Power in common with them: Therefore perhaps they were Legates from Jerusalem, but Subject to the Apostles. We see that the Lord of these Angels, present in the midst of them, is represented under the Symbol of Seven Stars, after the same manner as we find the Con. fecrations of the Emperors represented in their Medals; if living, with Crowns pointed with Seven-Rays; if dead, with the same Number of Stars. And therefore the Author of the Apocalypse represents the Apotheofis, or Deifying of our Lord, by that of the Roman Emperors; and consequently the Angels in the Apocalypse, who ran over the whole Earth, Zach. 4. 10. answer'd the Seven Spirits, that were the Eyes of the Lord; for in both places, there are also Seven Candlefticks; fo that there is no room for us to doubt, but that as the Author of the Revelations borrow'd fomethings out of Daniel, fo he has at least borrow'd this out of Zachariah; and so these Angels were Rulers of Churches, not born in the place, but sent Missionaries from Jerusalem; for our Lord himself did not preach any were elfe, neither was his Apotheofis, after his Death, to be represented in any other place,

Thus likewise St. Paul directs Timethy about ordaining of Bishops and Deacons, about receiving accusations against Presbyters, and a double honour due to those Presbyters had govern'd well; and 'tis observable, he gives this Advice to none but him; which he wou'd never have done, had this been an Office which the Presbytery might have discharged Now that his Office was not fix'd but itinerary, may be made appear by feveral Arguments: The Apostle himfelf testifies, I Tim. c. r. v. 3. That he befought him to abide still at Ephesus; 'tis therefore plain he was an Itinerary, when he was befought. In the next place, his doing the Work of an Evangelist, 2 Tim. 4. 5. is a convincing Proof. Besides, his frequent Journeys with St. Paul sufficiently show it, and his Name joynd to that of the Apostle, in the Inscriptions of the Two Epiftles to the Thessalonians. In like manner, the same Apostle gives Titus, and him alone, Directions about ordaining Presof Creet, Tit. 1. 5. He expresly says that he left him there, that he might set in order the things that were wanting; he was therefore the Companion of the Apostle, when he was left there. Many other Passages evince him to have been the Companion of that Apostle, and no more confind to any one particular place, than the Apostle himself was. In like manner, Distrephes seems to have been an ltinerary, who had Power to cast out of the

the Church, v. 10. All the Presbyters of the Church, who had Power to administer the Sacrament, must of Necessity have been fubject to him; and therefore if he had been a Presbyter, this affecter of Primacy must needs have been a Πεωπκάθεδιες. first Chairman; now one of that Character had no pretence at all to oppose himself to a Presbyter of Jerusalem; tho' an Itinerary, who deriv'd his Authority from the same Church of Jerusalem, from which St. John the Presbyter himself derived his, might have a pretence to do it. However we have no reason to doubt, but that these Itineraries, that were fent by the Clergy of Jerusa. lem, were subject to the Clergy of both Colleges, as well Apostles, as Presbyters, Therefore the reason why St. John threatens Diotrephes, was, because, being fent by the Authority of the Clergy of Jerusalem, he behaved himself with less Submission and Respect towards him, who was a Member of that very Clergy, than he ought to have For this reason, as I am apt to conjecture, Cajus, to whom this Epistle is Written, was of Opinion that Diotrephes was rather to be neglected than St. John. This Cajus feems to have been a Presbyter of that Church over which Diotrephes prefided, and appointed to entertain fuch as Travell'd that way, for the fake of Religion. The Occasion of writing this Epistle, unless I am mistaken, was, that St. John had given Symbols of hospitality to such Travellers, which

The same Apostle, 1 Cor. 9. 7. bestows the Name of Warfare, upon Journeys of this Nature, where he discourses of Military Provisions, that were due upon that Account of Warfare, and demands fomething of the like Nature, for his Preaching of the Gospel; which he had unproperly urged, if he had not looked upon the fatigues he underwent for the propagagation of it to have been a fort of a Warfare. Thus it appears, that in this first Interval at least, the whole Discipline of the Catholic Church, was administer'd by that of Jerusalem; for so we read, that the Sanedrim of Jerusalem had power to turn out of the Synagogues but not the Chief Rulers of the Synagogues, of other Cities that were fubject to the Sanedrim, without the approbation of the latter.

Now fince all those that Writ the Scriptures of both Covenants were Citizens of Ferula. lem, there is no reason why we shou'd underfland this to be faid of any other City, but that of Ferusalem. Therefore it follows you are built upon the Foundation of the Apostles (the Ministers of the New Covenant) and the Prophets (of the Old) Tefus Christ him felf, being the chief Corner-Stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth, unto a boly Temple in the Lord, Eph. c. 2. v. 20,21. The Temple alluded to here, as to the Mystic use of a Temple, must unquestionably be the fame with that of Jerusalem; for at the time when the Apostle writ this, the Peculiums of both Covenants met in this Temple; for altho' the Christians Synagogues, separated from the they never departed from the use of the Temple. Therefore the Unity of the Christians consisted in this, that they grew up into a Body with the Citizens of Jerusalem, and into one Body with them who frequented the Temple Sacrifices, altho' fuch as were uncircumcifed were not admitted into the Temple by the Jewish Rulers of it, until they had cut off their prepuce, and were likewise made Proselytes of Justice. the Hellenifical stile of the Jews that were scatter'd abroad, while they themselves were banished from their Native City of Gerusalem. All which the Jews did certainly mean of the Terrestrial Jerusalem, and so confequently did the Apostles, who were themselves of Jewish extraction, and after the manner of their Nation had imbibed an early Affection for their Native Country. Philo often expresses himself in this fort, and so do the Martyrs, mention'd by Eusebius, in his Discourse of the Martyrs of Palestine, own Jerusalem to be their City, meaning the celestial one I confess; but to which there was no admission, but through the Terrestrial, at least, according to the Opinion of the old Peculium. Neither did they think themselves to partake of Christ the Principal of Unity, unless they own'd the Church of Jerusalem to be the chief of all other, and paid all due Submission to it. And indeed this was but necessary, while the Apostolical College was confin'd only to Jerusalem. 'Tis certain, beyond all doubt, that each of the Apostles had Power over all the foreign Churches; for Presbyteries were every where erected in these Foreign Churches by extraordinary Rulers; now the Holy Scripture it felf owns that the Apostles were chief of them. if all the Churches in the World were subject to each of the Apostles, much more necessary was it that they shou'd pay Obedience to the Apostolical College, to which every Apostle in particular was Subject, and much much more to the President of this College, who was as well invested with all the Prerogatives of the first See, as of being the Principal of Unity. For as for this last Prerogative, which belonged to the President of the Jewish Sanedrim, the College of all the Apostles cou'd by no means challenge it in common to themselves. And indeed, during this interval of time, no one but the Bishop of Jerusalem cou'd represent our Lord as the Principal of Unity, and therefore all Schisms, in what part of the World soever they sprung up, dissolved all Communion with him.

XII. After this manner do the Writers, that This Pri- lived next to these times, express them-Charab of selves. We have the testimony of Hege. Jerusalem sippus, That, to the times of Trajan, the Church continued a Virgin, pure, and unbave been corrupted. 'Tis true, he does not mention known in the very next the Church of Jerusalem by name, which perhaps at that time was overwhelm'd in the Apolles. the ruins of that desolate City, at least for the greatest part, since Epiphanius tells us, there were only a few forry Cottages remaining there. But for a short time the Christians of Pella made up one com mon Body with the Christians of Jerusatem, and indeed we may gather out of the aforesaid Epiphanius, that the first disorders of the Heterodox appear'd in Peren, in which Province Pella was situate. Now both Hegesippus and Epiphanius were of Jewish Original; so that we have no reafon to suspect that they have afferted any thing which they did not take out of the lewish Monuments of both places, that they knew to be genuine. 'Tis evident herefore, that from the State of the Church of Jerusalem, Hegesippus took his neasures of the Catholick Church, which ad been highly incongruous, if the Church of Jerusalem had not presided over the Catholie Church. And indeed Hegesippus himself owns, that this Authority of the Apostles, which wholly centred in the Church of Ferusalem, prevented the startng up of Heresies; for no sooner were hey extinct, but the broachers of them bublickly appear'd and scatter'd them abroad. And perhaps we may pertinently mough refer to this head, the me xarixov, or the power withholding, 2 Theff. 2. 6. For fter his apigis or departure, he foretells hat ravenous welves that wou'd not spare the lock would enter in, Acts 20. 29. By which vords 'tis probable he meant Heretics; who after his death, (for that may likewife be the meaning of the word a pilis) wou'd appear in publick, according to the ppinion of Hegefippus. For this supreme Order of the Clergy of Jerusalem so dazled the Eyes of the whole Christian World, nd commanded so intire an obedience rom them, that so soon as they had fulminated any new Heresie by their Decretory sentence, it cou'd find no refuge or tarbour in any Church of the World foevet

But in facceeding times, when the Churches were reduc'd to a Parity, 'is natural to imagine it was much easier for them to disagree about confirming their Censures, than when all the rest of them believed that they were obliged to obey the voice of the Church of Jerusalem alone And from hence afterwards arose that boldness, which confidently supposes the power of the Church of Jerusalem to have been fuch, as we have proved it to be The fame is countenanced by that Tradi tion, which was handed down to Enfebin's time concerning the Apostles, - and other Relations of our Lord, as well as his Difciples, how that they return'd from their Travels, which they had undertaken for the propagation of the Gospel, to constitute Simeon, the Son of Cleopas, Bishop of Jerusalem. And from hence we may conclude how highly they thought themfelves interessed that this See should be filled. For we don't find they ever concern'd themselves so far about any other See, that of Rome it felf not excepted We likewise may observe, that not even then, tho' it was fo many years after the death of St. Peter, did this Supreme College of the Apostles think themselves released from that obligation which fixed and appropriated it to the Church of Je rusalem. proved to have been under the Bishop of Fernsalem, yet his Succession in the Primacy, if there had been any, won'd rather have returned to the Church of Jerusalem than that of Rome. But this by the by. That Writer in the Third Age, who under the Name and Person of Clemens Romanus, pub. lished the Recognitions and some other Suppositious Monuments, which are rather written in a Poetical than Historical Stile, was fensible of the Truth of what we have afferted. For he calls St. James, and not St. Peter, the Bishop of Bishops, after the Oriental manner, where it was the fashion to fet off the Supreme Dignity with exprefsions of that fort. Thus the Descendants of Arfaces, and Tigranes, call'd themselves Kings of Kings; thus likewise do the Holy Scriptures Stile our Saviour King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; which our Poet in some fort imitated, when he bestow'd the abovemention'd Elogium upon our Lord's Succellor. Afterwards, when the Primacy of the Church of Jerusalem was taken away, it looked odious and arrogant for one Bishop to lift himself up against his Collegues. Tertullian, by way of Irony, calls the Bishop of Rome, Pontifex Maximus, intimating thereby, that among Christian Pontiffs, one ought not to affect a Superiority over another. St. Cyprian in the Council of Carthage condemn'd this arrogance, and boldly affirms, that no Christian Bishop cou'd call himself Bishop of Bishops; who Ez who is the rather to be heard in this case, because if by the constitution of the Catholick Church, it had been lawful for one Bishop to have assum'd fuch a Title, no one had been sooner Honoured with it than himself; for he was Metropolitan of the first Proconfislar Province in Afric, and President of this Council. This very fame spirit of Haughtiness and secular Pride was severely curbed by the Fathers of the African Church in the Fourth Century, who Decreed, That the Metropolitans of Provinces should only be called Bishops of the first Sees, with this design, as we may guess, lest they shou'd be accounted Bishops of Suffragan The Inscription of the Abridge-Bishops. ment of this Council adds as follows: To the Council which follows the Holy Jerusalem, the Mother Church of Christians, and the other Churches of Christ founded every where by the good Providence of God. Therefore according to this Author, she was the Common Church of all Christians, and gave Laws to the rest that were Erected in all places by the Divine Providence. Neither does the Epistle prefix'd to the Clementines under the name of the same Clemens, and Translated by Rufinus, much disagree from this, that we may not suspect it to be owing to the Interpolations of later times. Now in the aforesaid Clementines, St. Peter in a certain Epiftle fo expresses himself, as if there were no other Bishop among Chriftians flians but St. James; for he calls him Lord, and Bishop of the Holy Church, not so much as mentioning the name of the City. after the same manner does the most ancient Ebionite Author, who certainly lived near these times, express himself. aforefaid unknown Author acknowledges the Supremacy of St James; for we find that St. Peter, according to him, believed himfelf obliged to give St. James an Account of what he had done, and order'd Clemens to inform the aforesaid James of his Preaching, and the Administration of his Function. And of the fame Opinion those Persons feem to have been, whoever they were, that first digested the Epistles into one Book, a little after the second Century. This is certainly the reason why they were placed in the same order wherein we now find them. The Epistle of St. Janies appears first, in respect of that Primacy which we have proved him to have had over the Apostles, when he was placed in the See of Jerusalem. St. Peter's Epistles come next, who was reckond the chief of the Apostles that were not Kinsmen; and therefore is fet down first, even when our Lord was alive. Nay, St. Paul himself, 1 Cor. 9. 5. places him next to St. James, and those Apostles that were related to our Lord. And in the Third place the Epistles of that Apostle appear, who took his place in the first Ternary of the Apostles, which was the very same which his Epistles still enjoy in the Book of Catholic Epistles, viz.

the Third and Last. And according to

'Tis true, Clemens of Alexandria neglected Alex. apud this Order, who however tells us, that Euseb. Hist these were in an eminent manner honoured by our Lord in the Apostolat, for that extraordinary Knowledge which he communicated to them, and not to the other Apostles. To this perhaps alludes, that which we have heard, which we have seen, &c. of the Word of Life, I John I. these things put together clearly evince, that these three Apostles were honourd with the first place among their Brethren, and that in the same order as I have already After the Apostles of the first Class, St. Jude follows, who although he belonged to the first Rank of the Kinfmen-Aposties, yet he was the first in no Rank; for the reafons we have already affigued. 'Tis true, he was of right to have been placed before John the Presbyter, unless People's doubting whether the Presbyter was a different Person from the Apostle, had occasion'd two doubtful Epistles to follow the first undoubted Epiftle of that Apostle, least they should be feparated from the true fituation of their Author. In fhort, I fuspect that the inscription of these Epistles intimates the same; for to call them Carbolic, is all one as if they were called Apostolic, or said to belong to those Apostles, of whom the College of Ferusalem was composed. This hower is certain beyond all dispute, That the Catholic Faith was the same with the Apostolie; and it was call'd Catholic, when after the death of the Apofiles it was to be gathered from the confent of the Churches founded by the Apostles; and, as 'tis commonly believed, derived its name from the Universal Consent of these Apostolical Churches. Tis evident that all that inquilition was made about no other Faith than that of the Apostles, after the jarring and different Traditions of the Heretics had render'd it dubious. And on the other other hand, because this Faith was Apostolical. it might therefore take the name of Catholic. If this were so, then all Apostolic things for the very same reason might be called Catholic, and consequently these Epistles, when once it was made appear that they were writ. ten by the Apostles of the College of Jerusalem, for this reason especially, that they might be distinguished by this Title from St. Paul's Epiftles, who although he was an Apostle, yet he did not belong to the Apostolical College of Ferusalem. But 'twill be objected that some have given the name of Catholic to St. Barnabas's Epistle, although he was St. Paul's Colleague in the Apostolat. However this does not hinder, but that by some particular favour of the aforesaidCollege it might be honour'd with the name of Catholic. The Holy Scriptures of the New Testament, call the unguyuca, or Preaching of the Apostles, (for so the Writers of the second Century, from whom the word Catholic seems to have had its beginning, express themselves) the Word of Life. And the Agyptian Writers, who publish'd in that Century certain Decrines, half Platonic, half Egyptian under the name of Hermes Trismegistu make mention of a hoyo. xaduhing. But it makes more for our purpole perhaps, that those Officers of the Roman Empire, who gather'd the Revenues of the Excheduer; were as well call'd hoyence, i. e. Nor was this Employment or Office so very different from that of our Christian Apostles; for they were to take care of fuch Widows and Poor, as were maintain'd by the Alms of the Church, and confequently gathered these Alms, not only at Jerusalem, but in the Foreign Churches, after the example of the Jewish Sanedrim, to which the Synagogues of other Countries duly fent their Tenths for the support and maintenance of the Poor of Jerusalem. Nay, the Apostles of Jerusalem demanded these Alms in the nature of a Tribute belonging to them; and bargained with the Apostles of the Gentiles, that they should duly pay them every Year. To conclude, Epiphanius acknowledges the Primacy of the Church of Jerusalem, Har. Lxx. N. 19. Fisteen Bishops, fays he, at once were made of the Circumcision, and then it behoved the Bishops of the Carcumcision, who were then in Jerusalem Governing the whole World, to follow thefe, and celebrate Easter with them, that there might become one Symphony, one Confession, and one persect Fealt. Here we find he looks upon the whole World to be subject to the first Bishops of Jerusalem, especially while they were of Jewish extraction. For my part I am of opinion, that they con'd challenge this no longer than while the last Apostle of our Lord's race was alive, who was the fecond Bishop of Jerusalem, of Roman Gentiles, who cou'd have no right over the City of Rome, out of which they originally came. What then is to be done? Must the Eccleastical Rights of all Cities, be at least restored, exactly as they enjoy'd them under the Primacy of the City of Gerusalem? But they had none in the first times of the Apostolic age, while the Jews and Gentiles, were knitting into one Body, while they Communicated together, both in the fame Synagogues and Temple, and acknowledged the Authority of the Jewish Sanedrim. Afterwards indeed, by little and little, the Christians withdrew into separate Meetings; but so that they acknowledged no other Rulers to have any Power over them, but the extraordinary ones, and who were peculiar to that Age at leaft, and confequently cannot be restor'd in our times, altho we never fo much defired it. The only thing that remains is, that the Presbyteries be restored, invested with no coercivePower; by this Means the whole Discipline of the modern Churches will be ftruck dead at one Blow. Offenders may fafely violate all Rules relating both to Faith and Manners, if neither the Church of Ferufalem, the President of all the rest, nor any other Church is invested with a sufficient Power to restain the insolence of Delinquents. Had this happen'd in that Age, Christianity had been very fhort-lived, and hardly latted a whole Century: For the Body of this new Peculium had been wholly dissolved, when so many new Heresies and Schisms, and so many Scandals upon the Dissolution of Unity, prefumed to appear in publick. And if the Body had been dissolved, the Religion it self must have follow'd of Course, and fallen a Sacrifice to the malice of its implacable Persecutors, the Jews and Gentiles, and those no less formidable Adversaries, the Apostate and Rebellious Christians. What Tacitus, up. on a little Occasion, observ'd of the Britains, that while each of 'em were fighting, the whole pere overcome, wou'd have been verified of the Church. Our Bleffed Saviour made the Same Remarks, about a House divided against it felf, and the Kingdom of Satan, if it laboured under intestine Divisions. Now 'tis certain, that these very Heresies were confounded by the Church, that a very severe Discipline was revived, and that all the Apostolical Churches held together in Peace and Concord: But 'tis impossible that these Glorious things should have been brought about, unless the respective Churches, that were the Guardians of Faith and Discipline, had been endued with a more ample power than they enjoy'd while the Church of Jerulalem carried all before it. However the History of this new endowment, is not to be expected in the Writings of the New Testament, which had been written and published fo many years before the Church of Jerusalem had fallen from its Primitive Jurisdiction.

Nav. the very History of the Apostles informs us, that all things were not revealed to them at once but by degrees, and according to the exi gence of Affairs. Before the Separation made from the Synagogues, the Apostle themselves seem to have known nothing: either relating to the Government, or the Separation it felf. But when the Jemi Blasphemed, and pursued the Christians with imprecations, and all that an unconquerable Malice cou'd Suggest to them, then, and not till then, did GOD reveal to them that it was necessary now to withdraw from their Assemblies; before which Time we have all imaginable reason to think that the Aposties abominated the very Thought of a Separation. They were not only Jews by Birth, but Zealous for their Law and their Country Customs, fo that they did not diver themselves of these hereditary and confirm's Affections at once, but by degrees. Had our Saviour communicated any Thing to them which had feem'd to have a tendency this way, 'twas to be fear'd that they world fooner have revolted from him, than obeyt him. The Apostles did not believe the Gentiles were to be gather'd into the Na Peculium without Circumcifion; and part cularly St. Peter himself was of that Belief till the Holy Spirit revealed the contrary him. Therefore our Lord proceeded warily neither did he think it convenient to trul hed new Wine into Old Bottles, nor while their Minds were thus alienated, to give them new Revelations of Facts, to which they had an intire abhorrance. And consequently there is no reason why we should suppose that they received open Revelations, concerning these Facts that were fo odious to them, before the Facts themselves happen'd. Can we possibly doubt, that the full exclusion of the Jews from the New Peculiam, and that the failure of our Lord's Race, and of the Fewish Church, which was composed of Jews, and upon that Account enjoy'd feveral Priviledges peculiar to it felf, were matters of hard digestion to the chief Apostles, who boasted the same extraction with our Saviour? Therefore if these Facts were not to be revealed to them before they actually happen'd, it had been much more unseasonable to have set down in writing, fo many years before the Destruction of Jerusalem, that Form of Government, which was to be observ'd through the whole Catholic Church, after the fall of the Church of Jerusalem: At least, if the Revelation had been so manifest, that it wou'd have unfolded the whole feries of its Destruction to them, before it happen'd: But in the Affair we are now discoursing of, there is a particular reason, why it was not necessary that it shou'd be expresly set down in the Canonical Writings; for although they had made never to plain Mention of that species of Ecclesiastical Government that was for ever to be observed, yet that MenMention wou'd have made us no more certain of it, than we should have been of the Books that had mention'd it. But without any fuch particular Mention, we have at least as great, if not a greater certitude of that Government which the Apostles instituted in the Church, as we have of the Books they writ. For certainly, if we will be guided by reason, the veracity of the Books written by the Apostles, depends upon the Testimony of the Age that was next to them. 'Tis highly probable that the Canon was not fo much as collected in the first Age, and therefore must be supported by the Testimony of the Second, when the Canon was first of all compiled, and faw the Light. But in the Second Age it was better known what fort of Government the Apostles left behind them in the Churches that were founded by them, than what Books they had Written. There cou'd be no other Witnesses of the Books, than only those that were upon the Spot, where the Apoftles writ them; but feveral Churches, that had been erected by the Apostles, were competent Witnesses of the Government ther established. The Witnesses of their Books must have been of an older date; to fetch down Traditions many Years before their Death. Now to deduce a Testimony of their Government from the remotest Time, required a lower age, and confequently afforded many more Witnesses; and as the Matter of Fact was more recent, this Evidence viden in ex lace a en, th les, W nat W ou'd ven v natte ut th nquir natel o hav hose ion (Cano ree ny p to it Wr 1.6 ment Chu feru vidence was much more certain, than any we in expect of their Books. Nay, in the very lace and age, wherein their Books were writen, the Government instituted by the Apoles, was much more notorious than the Books hat were written by them. Their Government ou'd not but be taken Notice of by People. ven when they were meditating upon other natters, and celebrated the Eucharift together; ut their Books were only feen by those that quired after them, and were their most intinateFriends, for others can hardly be supposed o have had any certainty about the Authors of hose Books. Therefore, fince an express menion of the Ecclefiastical Government in the Canonical Books, cou'd have added no new deree of certainty to it, there is no Reason why inv prejudices should be form'd in detriment o its Right, merely because the Canonical Writers have taken no notice of it.

Let us therefore secout of the later Monu- XV. ments, what new Rights descended to the other The race of Churches, upon the Destruction of that of our Lord ferusalem, and upon what Account they ob-extinct A. ain'd them. I was formerly of the Opinion that Simeon's Death fell out in the Year of our Lord, 116. but am apt to believe now, that it is to be placed to the beginning of Trajan's Reign. + Hegesippus tells + Apud us, that two Nephews of St. Jude, who ran Euleb. the rifque of their lives under Domitian, be cause they were descended from David's Race after the Peace was made, continu'd in this Life till Trajan's Time. This Peace happen'd under Nerva, when the exiles were re-call'd home: and therefore, when he affirms, that they reach'd Trajan's Reign, he means, that that Prince had not Reign'd long, when they died. One wou'd conclude from his way of expressing it, that both of them Died at one and the same Time. If this be so, 'tis mont probable that they then Died, when to be descended from the Davidical Line, was Crime fufficient to bring them into Danger of their Lives, viz. At the same time when Simeon, Brother to the Grandfather of Cleopas, was taken off upon the same Pretence. Otherwise, twas no wonder if the Nephews of St. Jude, div'd till the Time of Trajan, at which time they cou'd only write themselves young Men: For our Lord's Brothers, St. James and St. Jude, and Simeon, the Sons of Mary, the Daughterof Cleopas, Sifter to the Bleffed Virgin, were much of the same Age with them. And thereforethele Nephews of St. Jude lived to the Third Generation after our Lord. The abovemention'd Hegesippus testifies, that being dismissed by Domitian, they govern' dthe Churches; because they were admitted into the Clergy of Ferula lem, which then prefided over all Churches, and that upon a Two-fold Account; as Marrys, and as defended from our Lords Race. This last reason sufficiently shows that the Clergy, whereof their Family made them Partakers, cou'd be no other than that of Jerusalem; for we have already proved that those of our Lord's Race were admitted into it; but then it must have been the second Order of the Clergy, viz. That of the Presbycers, because their Age made them uncapable of the Apostolat: And this happen'd many years after the Number of the Apostleswas compleated, none of whom had a successor but Judas the Betrayer; for tis plain by the first Reason, that they were receiv'd into the Clergy of Jerusalem, after they had been dismis'd by Domitian. Now let us suppose, that at this time they were Thirty years old, (which Age the Levitical Law requires, as necessary for the Priesthood) then according to this computation, they cou'd not be past their Youth in the beginning of Trajan's Reign. Therefore Hegesippus's meaning must be, that not their Age, but the Delign then on Foot, to abolish the whole Race of David, was the reason why they did not out live Trajan. Nay, Hegesippus's words concerning Simeon, intimate that they died for the same Account that Simeon did. In like manner, fays he, be was accused before Atticus the Conful, for the fame Reason. this Atticus was, does not appear, neither know we the precise time when he was Conful, or of the Consular rank: But 'tis probable the first Infurrections in the Fast, gave pretence sufficient to take them off, who had been long ago suspected under Domitian. These Commorions, unless I am mistaken, began in Arabia, and were suppressed by Palma, much about the Time that Trajan himself put an end to the Second Dacian War, viz. A.D. 107. The Author of St. Ignatin's Martyrdom makes this Year, which was the Ninth of Trajan, famous Perfecution; this Emperour's late Victories over the Dacians, making him forget his former Moderation and Temper. And indeed, 'tis evident out of Hegefippu, that Simeon fuffer'd as well for our Saviour's Account, as the Score of his Family; for to what end were his Torments inflicted upon him, but to force him to deny Christ and not only to punish his extraction from David? However, 'tis certain that Ignation was not taken off in this Persecution, the' the Author of his Martyrdom will needs have him fuffer this Year, being led into this Mistake, I suppose, because he had heard this was a great Year for Persecution, particullarly for that which dissolved the Primacy of Jerusalem, the Race of our Lord being now wholly exterminated: For this was one of the most remarkable Epochs in Ecclesiastical History; and if any, this certainly ought to be deliver d to posterity by Christian Writers Eusebius in his Chronicon places the Death of Simeon, the Son of Cleopas, towards the conclusion of the Tenth Year of Trajan; 'tis more probable that he fuffer'd in the beginning of the War; for the was the proper Time to suppress the infolence of the Jews, in case they shou'd attempt any Thing against the Peace of the Roman Empire unless the Jews discover'd their Hostile latentions, not till 'after the War was actually broke out. But the Author of the Chronicon Paschale places the Martyrdom of Simeon uplate on Two years, wiz. 104 and 105, being betray'd into this mistake, by his having two Names; for he affirms, that Simeon the Canaumine fuffer'd in the foregoing, and Simeon the Son of Cleopas, in the fucceeding Year. He was ignorant, it feems, that no Apoltle cou'd possibly be a Canaanice, who came from a different Race from that of the Jews. In other Manufcripts he is more rightly call'd Kava as. which in the Hebrew fignities the fame as Zaharus does in the Greek; and in the next place, he was ignorant that Someon the Son of Cleopas, was the same with Zelotes. Now his placing the fame Martyrdom of the fame individual Person upon two years, proceeded, unless I am mistaken, from the different placing of the fame Confuls, Candidas, and Quadraeus, in two different Confular Tables. I am of opinion that these Consuls are to be affign'd to the Year 104 tho' the common accounts place them to the year 105. So then all that the Compilers of this Chronicon took our of undoubted Memoirs is, that Simeon fuffer'd Martyrdom when they were Confuls. Now it might happen fo, that according to both Accounts his Passion fell out under their Confulat, viz. towards the end of the former, and beginning of the latter Year; for the first Dacian War begun towards the conclufion of the Year 100. But both the Wars lasted five Years, as Julian the Apostate informs us in his Cafars. If in the fifth Year an end was put to the fecond War, and we suppose it was but only begun, then 'tis plain the War ended in the Year 104. But if both Wars took up five Years intirely, Trajan IG-reduced Dacia into the form of a Province rather in the Year 105. And therefore, if Trajan, being puff'd up with the victorious fuccess of this War, began a Persecution, this Storm, so fatal to the Church of fernsalem, may be properly enough placed in either Year. But I think there's more Reason for placing Infeb. Hift it to the beginning of Trajan's Reign, that

Eccl. 1. 4. fo we may allow a larger Space to the Thirteen Bishops, who passed between this our Apostle Simeon, and the Romans who dwelt npon the Ruins of Jerusalem in the new Collony there that was call'd Elia Capitolina. Since Eusebius knew nothing of these times, we need not doubt but that whatever the Writers that came after him have related concerning them is wholly Fabulous and to be rejected. The many fuccessors that we find in this Church, within fo short a compass of time, fufficiently show, that it seldom enjoy'd any intervals of Peace, altho the Supputation were to begin from the Year we affign'd; so that it wou'd become less probable if it were to be shut up within narrower limits. Tis certain it must have an earlier beginning under Trajan, than the Ebioneans, who started up after the Death of Simeon, might have time enough to make fo great a progress as they did, as well in Peras

Iren. 1. 5. as in Afia minor, and that while Trajan was Emperor. It must likewise have begun ear-Euseb. Hiff lier fince Irenaus, who, was born A. D. 97, Eccl. Polycarp, call'd an old Man even by Irenain himself, and who consequently was older than. he, did not hear the chief Apostles, but only their Auditors, To conclude, it must have been earlier, fince the Heretics, who wrote about the beginning of Hadrian's Reign, had by that time render'd the Tradition o'the Apostles uncertain and not to be confirm'd, but by long Voyages, and very ancient Witnesses. That this remarkable Destruction, happen'd at the same time, we may gather from hence, That about this juncture, the Christians undertook new Expeditions into India, newly conquer'd by Palma, being dispers'd by the very same Persecution, which extinguished the Family of our Thus the Perfecution, under which Stephen suffer'd, proved a of propagating the Gospel, Acts 8. 4. and the fame appears by the Enquiry Hegesippus made into the Faith of the Apostles, by reason of some new Herefie started up under Hadrian, which had so far abused and mis-represented the Apostles, as to make them not only differ from themselves, but from one another; Tho' he was a Jew by Birth, yet he was not content with the bare Testimony of the Church of Jerusalers, fince now she had lost all those particular Rights and Prerogatives, which when the enjoy'd, made her heard before all other Churches. Now he might have heard from some that were older than himself (if there were any fuch) what the Opinion of the Apoftles was, and how far it agreed with it felf: But no old Men of Ferulatem, are any where produced as Witnesses of the Apostolic Tradition against the Heretics. their most bloody and frequent Persecutions? one upon the neck of another, feem to have fo intirely diffipated the Members of that Church, that it hardly kept up the Face of Church: For Enfebius has only preferv'd the Names of the Bishops, but was wholly in the Dark as to their Actions. If Tradition may be relied upon St. Bartholomen went into India. Papias feems to make John the Presbyter, and Aristion not meet in Jerusalem, but Asia minor. If this were fo, the Traditions of the Apollies were not to be learnt from the Apostolic Church it felf, but from the Colonies which the Apostles planted elsewhere. Papias, the oldest Searcher after Traditions, pretended to no Traditions from Simeon; but from fome Apollles that were younger than he altho' they died before him. He gather'd his Traditions when Trajan was Emperor, not at Jerusalem, but as 'tis more probable in Afia the Less; Otherwise he had most infallibly made mention of Simeon, who was the Prince of the latter Apoles. But the Memory of the Church of Jerusalem cou'd hardly have been fo totally effaced, when Hegesippus gather'd his Traditions under Pin the Emperor, if Simeon had lived till the end Eufel Hift. of Trajan's Reign. Hegesippus came to Rome Eccl. 1.4. when Anicetus was Pontiff there, and Pius Bishop of Corinth, who was succeeded in that See, by Dionysim, a Contemporary of Sover the fuc. cessor of Anicetus. I am apt to believe that the main reason why the Gentiles thunder'd so furioully upon the Church of Jerufalem was, that when the Head was once taken away, the fate of Christianity wou'd foon follow after. But God made the Event very much different from what they expected.

For instead of onehead, viz. the Bishop of XVI. The Church of Ferusalem had no Churches thing now to boalt off, by which the cou'd equal to the pretend to any pre-eminence over other Bishop of Jerusalem, Churches: With the last Apostle, even the when that very Office of the Apostolat fail'd; for, as See flourists. I have had occasion to observe; none of the ed. Apostles had any Successors substituted into their Room, but only Judas the Betrayer. And so it fell out, that the Order of Presby. ters (which heretofore was the second Rank in the Church of Ferufalem) was afterwards the first. Thus the Church of Ferusalem after this change had no order peculiar to itself; fince all other Churches in the World Had their own Presbyteries in every City. All that any of the Presbyters of that City, had now to value themselves upon, was to be perhaps related to our Lord: For the Holy Seed was much efteem'd by the new Peculium, as coming from a Holy People, but especially a Hebrew of Hebrews, who was born holy by both Parents, of which St. Paul boafts, Phil. 3. 5. The Sacerdotal Seed was yet holier than this, so that it was reckon'd an enormous Offence, if one of an other Tribe, nay, even that of Levi itself, was admitted into the Priesthood, if he was not descended from the Race of Aaron. But among Christians it was necessary, that the race of the Priesthood of Melchisedeck, to whom Levi himlelf

And from thence we may gather that the Christians were not unacquainted with this way of Arguing, as is now commonly believ'd. We find the aforesaid Apostle boasts, that the Lord was known to him according to the Flesh, 2 Cor. 5. 16. and he looks upon it as a great Glory to the old Peculium, that out of it, as concerning the Flesh, Christ eame, Rom. 9. 5. To these and the like Opinions we may afcribe it, that in all Churches, fuch as first embraced the Faith of Christ were reckon'd the first Fruits thereof upon which account they were advanc'd to the Priesthood, as being holier than the rest: For the same reason, Polycrates boafts, that he was the Eighth Person of his Family, who had been Bishop of Ephesus. But the same Persecution, which carried off Simeon the Son of Cleopas, carried of likewise all those Presbyters that were Kinsmen of our Lord. Thus the Church of Ferusalem, had nothing to distinguish it from other Churches, but that it was composed of Fews. But Hadrian ejected all of that race out of Ælia Capitolina, wherein none, that were Circumcifed, were permitted to live. cond Peculium was holier than the first, and thus the Seed of Abraham by Faith was to be prefer'd to his Seed by the Flesh; as to the right of the promises made to him. Now, altho' this difagreed with the opinion of the Fews, who valued themselves upon being descended from Abraham by the Flesh. yet it was consonant enough to the Reasonings of the Christians, who had the same interest in Abraham's Flesh, that the Fews cou'd pretend to, For Haac was prefer'd to Ahmael, and Facob to Efau, as the Apoffle of the Gentiles has observed, who nevertheless makes Isaac and Facob Types of the younger Peculium. A like remark has zpiff. Barbeen made by St. Barnahas his Collegue in nab. c. the Apostolate of the Gentiles, who ohser-13ves, that when Facob came to Bless the Sons of Foseph, he prefer'd Ephraim the younger to Manasses the Elder. The same Writer has observ'd that Facob's hands were then decussated in the Fashion of a Cross, hereby intimating to us, that after the Crucifixion of our Saviour, the leffer and younger Peculium shou'd enjoy the greater Privileges. fame Argument might be drawn from Phares: and Zara, the Twin-Sons of Thamar, of whom he, that otherwise wou'd have been the youngest, broke his way first into the World. When these Prophecies were fulfill'd, both the pre eminence of the fews, and the Grafting of the Gentiles, which Sr. Paul had acknowledged before, were of neceffity to cease. before they fell out, yet after they had happen'd, there was no reason for them to pretend, that this was fortuitous and not by the determin'd purpose of God; no more than it was doubted in the Case of Cornelius, whether the Gentiles were to be admitted into the new Peculium, without becoming first Proselytes of Righteousness; or in the Case of S. Paul and S. Barnabas, whether the Gentiles were to be invited into the Peculium, altho' both these things, before they happen'd, were not only directly contrary to the Opinion their Ancestors had of them; but also to that of the chief Apostles. Twas evident therefore, that thefe Events were to imputed to the over-ruling Wisdom of God, and consequently, that he was the Author of all those things, which might be deduced from thefe Events by Lawful Confequences, according to the manner of Reafoning then in use; for so they reasoned in the very History of the Apostles, Alls 15. 18.

The Church of Ferufalem being thus diffipa-And that ted, and rifled of all its Prerogatives, that made the Will of first place, that this Superiority was taken ahis Apostles way by the Divine Providence. Metropolitan Cities of the Roman Provinces were not invested with any Christian Dignity above the rest; for there was no order between the Synagogues of the foreign Cities; but all of them, not one excepted, were subject to the Sanedrim of Ferusalem, and to its Itinerary Ministers. And 'twas impossible things should be otherwise, while the Church of ferufalem alone was intrusted with theGovernment of all otherChurches, and all their Presbyteries had no coercive Power, as we have already observed. For this Parity was the reason, that there cou'd be no such thing as a Subordination among them: Therefore all Churches for the future were to be Supreme, and enjoy all those Rights of Primacy in common, which formerly belonged only to the Church of Jerusalem. And this our Lord plainly foretold : St. John 4. 21. as we suppose we have formerly proved in an English Treatise, about One Priesthood, and One Altar. Now when this had happened, no one doubted, but that our Lord had ordered it to to be; neither was there any need of a new Revelation of this kind to be inferred into the Canonical Books: Nay, if any Revelation had been necessary, there were Persons still alive, who might have been consulted; for St. John the Presbyter, furvived the Martyrdom of Simeon. probable, that what St. Epiphanius relates of Ebion, and St. Frenews of Cerinthus, viz. Moreover these Ages were famous for the Gifts of the Holy Spirit, and for frequent Miracles, which are undeniable Arguments, that God upheld and maintain'd that Discipline. All which unwont ed Favours cou'd never have been hoped for, if so great a change had proceeded from Anti chrift, and the Mystery of Iniquity, as some Opiniatres pretend. The Apostles, I am fure, used to argue after another manner, for when any matter was fuspected by them, yet being overcome by contrary Revelations and Miracles, they dropt the Dispute, and fairly came over to the other fide. for Instance, in the case of Cornelius, St. Peter published the Revelation, which had been communicated to him. When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying; Now therefore bath God given to the Gentiles Repentance to Life. Acts 11. 18. Thus in the Council held by the Apostles in Ferusalem: All the Multitude kept filence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul declaring, what Miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them. Acts 15. 12. And being convinced by these Signs and Wonders, they fram'd a different Decree, from what they wou'd otherwise have done And therefore the Disciples of the Apostles, that lived in these Ages wou'd have argued after the same manner, it they intended to imitate their Precepters the Apostles: But to speak impartially, G 4

these Men, that pay'd so great a respect to the Memory of the Apostles, had nothing to find Fault with. There was no reason, why they should be offended, if by the Divine providence interpoling, some Rights, that were instituted by Christ and his Apostles, deyolv'd upon other Churches. And much less, why they should complain of the perfons, when those rights descended upon the Bishops of the first Sees. whom the Apottles had made the last in that Office.

The first itles, but from their Obedience Aposties.

Thus we can hardly suppose, that the A. XVIII. posses disapproved that, which we find rati-Bishops h. a fied by the unanimous approbation of their their power most intimate Friends and Disciples, not so given them much as one standing out, as far as we by the Apo- know, or the least Foot-step, or trace of not fuch a their diffent appearing. For the veracity of one as ex- the Pontifical Book, is very much to be que. cufed them frion'd, and much more the confequences, which Blondell wou'd draw from thence. due to the On the other hand 'ris most probable, that the Apostles so prepared the minds of their Disciples, that they received the succeeding form of Ecclefiaftical Government quietly, and without the least Murmuring. Even those, who were alive, when the matter of Fact was most Fresh in their Minds, testifie, that the first Bishops of Churches, at least, such as were A. poltolical, as being Founded by the Apostles, were appointed by the Apostles themselves, altho' the name of Bishops was only given to the Heasonabeden. Hegessppus has collected and compiled the Successions of them down from the very Apostles. Terruttian affirms, 1.

that Polycarp was placed by them in the Church of Smyrna, Prascript c. 28. and the Latin Interpreter of Freneus, that he was constituted by the Apostles, 1. 3. Adv. Her. c. 3. And of the Apostles, that Founded the Church of Rome, they conferr'd upon Linus the Office of the Episcopar, says Frenaus, in the abovemention'd place. Again the same Father afferts, that Bishops were instituted by the Apostles in the Churches, and elsewhere: The Bishops, to whom the Apostles intrusted the Churches, 1. 5. c. 20. Nay, he ascribes the Successors of the Apostolical Churches, to the Apostles themselves. He speaks of the Successors of the Bishops, to whom, fays he, they committed the care of the Church in all places, 1. 4. c. 63. And Tertullian has a great deal to the same purpose. I thought it improper to cite, any other Witnesses upon this occasion, but those of undoubted antiquity, and who lived nearest those times to which their Testimonies relate. I might alledge the affertions of other ancient Writers, to make it appear beyond all denyal, that they looked upon the Bishops to be the Successors of the Apostles. 'Tis indeed very probable, that the primitive Ancients included the The Monades for, fuch as they were under the Church of Jerufalem, invested with no coercive Authority; under the name of Bishops: And that not without reason, since their order was the very fame, upon which afterwards the Supreme Rights devolved. Tis certain, they comprehend all under this Name, who received the first Chair from the Apostles. Thus they seckon Linus, Anacletus, and Clemens in the See of Rome, the very last of whom received this Dignity from the Apostles. However this new accession of honour, which perhaps might happen to the latter, might not happen to the former, while the Primacy of Ferufalem flourished. From hence it evidently appears, that upon thefeSuccessions of the Apoltolical Sees, the Title of First the Chair might be common to them all, and yet that the power of those, that held these First Chairs was not one and the fame, so that from hence we can by no means conclude, that the name of Bishops was attributed to all these Succesfors, I mean, as 'tis the proper name of an Order diffinct from the Presbyters, and much less that Power, which occasioned the peculiar right of the Hewlorades eou, to be called by a peculiar Name. And therefore fince this manner of arguing does not hold in all the Succellors of the Apoltolical Sees, in the Apostolical Age, we cannot be certain whether it will hold in any one Successor, who might even be the last. On the contrary, Reason seems to tell us, that this power which became common to all Bishops afterwards, was not given, at least in this Apo. folical Age, to the Chief Chairmen of the other Sees, whom the Apostles themselves constifuted, that so they might be the next Principles of a Vifible Unity after God and Christ. For the refult of it wou'd have been this, that fuch Bishops must own no obedience, either to the Apostles, or to the Bishop of Ferusalem himhimself, at least in such things, as belonged to their respective Diocesses. Nay, the Apostles wou'd have drawn the Judgment of God and Christ upon themselves, had they taken upon them to call into Question the Judgment of fuch Bishops. And these Consequences wou'd have follow'd according to the manner of Arguing used in that Age, as we have already observed: Nay, all the Apostles in Conjunction cou'd not give such a Power without the consent of the Bishop of Jerusalem; for this Prerogative was peculiar to him, as being the first Apostle, to whom, altho' they were equal in all other Respects, yet they were inferior to him in this, because he cou'd not be otherwise than chief among the Apostles. And therefore if any of the Apostles had absolved any other Bishop from his Obedience due to the Bishop of Ferusalem, without his consent, the invisible Bishop above wou'd not have ratified it in Heaven; and besides the Apostle, who had confecrated that Bishop, and whom, by that Right, he had made a Bishop, wou'd have separated himself from the Peculium, and all Rights belonging to it. Now we can hardly imagine, that any fuch Power was Communicated to the Bishops, while the Bishops acknowledged the Apostles to have a superior Authority; and the Church of Ferusalem exercised the Rights, that were peculiar to it, upon these very Bishops, in whatever part of the World they were Constituted; however, this does not hinder, but that the Apostles, while they were Living, might and the second second might admonish the Church of what Obedience they owed to the Bishops after their Decease, as Moses had done in the Case of fosbua. And this I take to be the true State of this Affair.

We have already observ'd, that many of AfterSime the Ferusalem Clergy resided in Asia the Less on's Mar- in the beginning of the fecond Century. Here tyrdom the in all probability were those Persons, whose Apostolical Traditions Irenaus heard in Asia; as also was at E-those whom his Master Polycarp both faw and heard, for both Polycarp and Irenaus phefus, where St. feem to have been Natives of Asia. Here Apostle was Papias, who was also Bishop of Hierapolis President; in Asia, met those, whose Traditions he Collected. Here he learnt his Traditions concerning St. Peter, St. Andrew, St. Philip, St. Thomas, St. James, St. John and St. Mathew the Apostles. Here, as he himself informs us, he saw and heard the Prophesing Daughters of Philip, as also John and Aniftion, the Disciples of our Lord, whom he calls Presbyters, and who, 'tis probable, belonged to the second Order of the Clergy of Ferusalem. He mentions no Tradition concerning Simeon, altho' he fuffered Martyrdom under Trajan the Emperor, which can hardly be accounted for, if he had gathered his Traditions in Palestine the Fountain Head of them And therefore 'tis probable that most of these Apostles were not only for a fliort time in Afia, but refided there. The aforesaid Papias affirms, that St. John the Apostle and Presbyter were both Buried at Ephesus. Polycraies afferts the same of St. Philip the Apostle; and indeed Clemens Alexandrinus Se

Alexandrinus informs us, that St. John lived a little while at Ephefus, and more ApadEnfeb. than once vifited all Afia, at least that which Hiff. Eccl. was called the Proconfular. Polycrates 1.3. c. 31. adds, that he was a Priest and wore the 24. Gr. TE TANOV Or Golden Plate. His being a Priest had nothing fingular in it, fince the relt of the Apostles belonged to that chief College of the Clergy of Jerusalem, which exactly answered the Archieratical College of the Jewish Sanedrim. Neither had it been for the glory of the new, but holier Peculium, if he had bore a Priesthood among the Jews, especially if compared to his Collegues in the holier Pontificate of the new Peculium. as it was here done by Polycrates, who unquestionably intended some distinguishing. fome peculiar Honour to St. John the Apostle, which made him respected before the other Apostles even of his own Order. 'Tis plain therefore, he meant the chief Priesthood, by which he became a Priest by way of Eminence, and worethe badge of it, viz. The Golden Plate in his Forehead. Indeed, after the Death of Simeon, and the extinction of David's and our Lord's Race; St. John, by his own Right was Thewroud des gos or Chief Chairman of the furviving Apostles, as being the only Man left of three, whom Clemens Alexandrinus affirms to have been the Chief of the Apollles that were notKinfmen. And this the Nature of the thing it felf thews, as we have already observed: For which Reason I conjecture, that when that Church of Ferusalem, which resided at Pella la, was diffipated by the Romans after the Martytdom of Simeon, the Ebionwans immediately raised new Commotions and Disorders at Perwa and forced the Apostles to leave the place, who were then bufied in chofing a Bishop of Ferusalem in Simeon's room. Epiphanius affures us, that from hence they translated fome Colonies of their Sect into Asia, and that the Apostles being informed of it, betook themselves from that place of their Banishment into Asia, the Romans hindering them from returning to Palestine, and that at last they fixed their abode at Epbesus, on purpole to prevent the growth of this fpreading Herefie: That here they compofed one Body under St. John their President. who wore the Golden Plate as the Badge of his Supremacy; but that the Apostles, who met there, did not live much longer after this, fince we read of no new Attempts of Iren. L 3. the Romans against them. Irenaus indeed testifies, that St. John remained at Ephesus, till the time of Trajan; in which place he likewife takes notice, that Cerinthus was there condemn'd by him. What Irenaus relates of Cerinthus, the very same does Epiphanius report of Ebion. This Apostle Iren. 1. 3. therefore, during his abode in Ephefus, a City of Afia Minor, published bis Gospel, as the Iren. 1. 3. aforesaid Irenaus testifies, and indeed with that Defign and Purpose, That he shou'd extirpate that Error, which Cerinthus had planted in Men: For after this manner the same Apostolical Writer Expresses himself. Now 'tis morally impossible, that Irenews shou'd be deceived in any of these particulars, who when he was a Young Man, heard Polycarp the Disciple of St. John in Asia, when the Evangelical Hiftory was very recent in their Memories; and, unless I am mistaken, the following words of the Gospel are to be understood in the Person of the Apostles, who were then present: This is the Disciple, who gives his Testimony about these things, and has wrote concerning them, and we know, that his Testimony is true, St. John 21. 24. namely we the Apostles, who here by their own Testimony likewise approve, what he had written. For some other Commentators have vety erroneously applied these wordsto the Prefbyters of the Church of Ephesus. But the Presbyters would not have prefumed to make any Interpolations upon the facred Text of the ofpel of their own deviling. Belides they were not competent Witnesses of the Original of Christianity, as 'tis delivered in the Gospel, fince they were Converted to Christianity so many Years after it, when St. Paul founded the Church at Ephefus, Acts 19. 1. For * Clemens Romanus testisses, * Epist. at that the first Governors of Churches were Constituted by the Apostles out of the first Cor. n. 401 Fruits of those Churches. Neither, indeed, can we suppose those Persons throughly vers'd in the Rudiments of Christianity, who, although they had been made partakers of Baptism by St. John, were Bap-tised again by St. Paul, ver. 3. 4. 5. at which time they did not fo much as know whether there was a Holy Ghost: For our Saviour

Saviour commanded his Disciples to Baptife in the Name of the Holy Ghoft, Mat. 28. 19. and St. John the Baptist told the Jews, whom he had admitted to Baptism, that the Lord wou'd Baptise with the Holy Ghest. St. Mat. 3. 11. St. Matk 1. 8. St. Luke 3. 16 St. John 1. 33. as the Apostle of the Gentiles himself also observed in this very place of the Alls. Nay, it was a branch of the Apoltolical Office, to be a witness of the things that were done by our Lord, Alls c. i. 22. c. 26. 16. and 'twas beneath the dignity of that Function, to want another Man's commendation, viz. of one, who had not been an Apostle himself, 2 Cor. 3. 1. and yet it was cultomary with the Apostles to interpose their own words, when they were in the presence of the Chief Writer, who writ. Thus we find Tertius, who was the Apostles Amanuenfis, Salutes the Romans in his own Name, Rom. 16. 22. And therefore St. John's Gospel does not wholly rely upon his own authority, but likewise that of the Apostles, who were then present. Neither has he fet his Name to his first Epistle, of which there never was any doubt rais'd in the Church. Dionysius of Alexandria has long ago observed, how cautiously he abstains from making any mention of his own Name, not only here, but also in the Gospel, which bears his Name. And in the beginning of this Epiftle he speaks in the name of many, tho' afterwards he speaks in the fingular number. The Reason of his doing so is easie to be gathered out of these primitive Hypotheles

Hypotheses we have already lay'd down: He omitted this honour, as folely belonged to the first Presidents of the Apostles, who alone were to fet their own Names to those Epistles, which were worded by the common approbation of the whole Col lege of the Apostles, excepting only the Letter of the Council of Ferusalem, which is not inscribed in the Name of the President, but that of both Collèges. 'Tis certain, that St. Peter and St. Paul, who were not Prefidents of the Apostolical Colledge inscribed their Epistles in their own Names: And so likewise does St. Fames the President in his, and St. Jude, whom I suppose to have writien his, while there was a fede vacante in Jerusalem. St. John perhaps thought this Inconfistent with his Modesty, who not only by his own Suffrage had voted the Prefidentthip of our Lord's Kinsmen, but tathet reckon'd himself a Presbyter, than an A. postle, because he had not the Honour to be related to our Bleffed Saviour. But for my part, I conjecture from the plural number, with which he begins his Epiltle, that while he was Writing it, fome other persons were present, to whom he durst not prefer hinffelf, and those cou'd be none other, than A. postles. This is the reason, why he so much urges the Fellowship with us, which in another place he calls our Fellowship, meaning, that of the whole Apoltolical College. 1.3. And indeed he does nothing but enumerates the Myltical benefits of that Fellowship throughout his, whole Epistle, Fellowship with the Father and 1 be the Son, and Light, Life, and Truth, which he ascribes to the Word in his Gospel: Not only for the same reason, that the Vifible Communion of the modern Churches makes us partakers of the Mystical Benefits of the Invisible Communion, but also be cause that was looked upon to be the Origin nal Church of the new Peculium, which was joyn'd to the Apostles, and because those Mystical Benefits were believed to belong immediately to the Original Church, nor o therwise to belong to the younger Churches than those very Churches were grafted upon the Apostolical Church, as we have shown elfo where. Now that this Epistle was written in the last part of this Apostle's Life thek words demonstrate: Omnis Spiritus, qui solvit Jesum (for so the Vulgar Interpreter reads it conformable to the Ancients) or as we renderit, every Spirit that confesseth not, that Jesus Christ is come in the Flesh, is not of God C. 4. v. 3. This passage directly confronted the Doctrine of certain Hereties, who held that Jesus was a different person from Christ, affirming, that Christ did not descend upon Jesus, till such time, as he was Baptised, and that when Jesus afterwards suffered, Christ flew away from him. Tis after this manner, that Frenaus talks of Cerimbus who taught the fame abfurdities, if he was not the same with Ebion. Hithero allude those words, Chap. 5. 1. Every one, who believes, that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God, and v. 5. Who is it, that overcomes the World, but he, who believes, that Jesus is the Son of God? As also these that preceded

By this means the Church of Jerusalem was levell'd, and the Primacy thereof transla-XX. ted to that of Ephefus. 'Tis certain, that From the Church was still in being, fince there are reck. Primacy on'd thirteen Bishops of that See, from the translated Martyrdom of Simeon down to Mark, the first from the Bishop of the new Colony call'd Ælia Capi Church of tolina, towards the conclusion of Hadrian's to that of Reign. However, the next Sucessor of Si- Ephesus. meon had no right over the Apostles, as being himself no Apostle. Hence it follows. that he was subject to the Apostles, and to the abovementioned President of the A. postolical College, and that he had nothing of pre-eminence to boaft of, over the Bithops of the Ordinary Churches. 'Tis evident, the Church of Rome did not obey the Bishop of Jerusalem, when a Colony was sent to Mia Capitolina in the Emperour Hadrian's time. Otherwise the Church, which now was wholly composed of Gentiles, to gather with a Gentile Bishop at the head of them, could never have come into the place of the Jews, that were driven from thence, for we need not question, but that this was much against the Will of the latter. But, much less possible was it for a new Colony to have dif-H 2 fer'd fer'd fo much from the lews in celebrating the Feast of Easter, the Observation of which Day they took from their Metropolitical City of Rome: For it was not in the power even of the Church of Rome to change that Jewish Custom while she pay'd Obedience to the Church of Ferusalem, which was most strictly observant of its Country Cuitoms, as far as 'twas Lawful. But the Apostles were now throughly convinced by those Signs and Wonders they had feen, that God was displeased at the preeminence of the Tews, and wou'd no longer countenance it. After the Destruction of the Temple they found that they cou'd not perform those Offices which belonged to that facred place; for which reason they betook themselves to a mystical Interpretation of those Offices; nay, even of those which folely concerned the Jewish Nation. Barnabas observes this Conduct all along in his Epistle, and the whole feet of the Essenes were ready enough to understand these Offices in this Sense. They found that Circumcifion was an ufeless Burthen upon them, while the Tribute that was gathered from the Circumcifed was transferr'd from the Worship of the true God to that of Idols in the Temple of Peace. They faw that these received Opinions of the lews were an everlaiting Obstacle to the Conversion of the Gentiles, and hinder'd them from growing into one Body and Communion. Neither is it irrational to suppose, that many of the Fews, but especially the Effencs, were by this time, weary of Circumcifion. ing

Thefore they thought it the most expedient to Peace, to permit those Jews that were willing, the free use of the Mosaical Ceremonies, but not to impose them upon such as were unwilling. It manifefully appears by S. Fustin's Dialogue with Tryphon, that they steer'd this middle Course; so that St Fcrome, and the Schoolmen that follow him. are very much mistaken, who held those Ceremonies to be Sinful after the Temple of Ferufalem was levell'd to the Ground. However, when they faw these Men of Jerusalem so obstinately Tenacious of their Country Rites, they left them to themselves in Peace; however they thought it convenient to Translate the Authority of the chief Seat from them, least they should seem to impose any unnecessary Yoke upon those that were unwilling: Neither need we doubt that this Translation of the first See was commanded by feveral express Revelations. which were now both necessary and feafonable, fince Providence it felf interposed to forbid the longer Observation of these Rites. even to fuch as were willing to comply with them. So then about this time, when the Seat of the Apostolical College was translated to E. phesus, the Name of BISHOP, as I conjecture, and that too by the Authority of the Apostles, began to be properly applied to the first Chairmen. St. Irenaus's words concerning Polycarp are express to this purpose: Polyshops, and carp was not only taught by the Apostles, and conversed with many of those, that saw our Lord; but also was constituted Bishop in Afia, in the Church, which is at Smyrna. Here we may plainly trace out a College of Apostles in Asia; by whose common Authoria ty Polycarp was appointed Bishop of Smyr. na. Now why shou'd we doubt, that Irenaus used the word BISHOP, especially when applied, as here, to one particular Man, in the very fame fignification, as was commonly given it in the Age, wherein he writ? Or what Reason have we to doubt of the Matter of Fact, which he heard from Polycarp himself, when he was a young Man in Asia? That Polycarp was President of the Presbytery, plainly appears from his own Epistle to the Philippians, mention'd likewise by Irenam, which none of the Ancients, cients, as far as I remember, ever offer'd to call in Question. Now this Testimony of Irenaus is above all exception. fame College of Apostles at Ephesus are we to understand the afore-cited Testimonies of Irenaus, wherein he affirms, that Bithops were Constituted by them in every place. Besides St. Ferome testisses, that St. Fohn writ his Gospel at the intreaty of the Bishops of Afia. It follows therefore from hence, that there were Bishops in Asia, before that Gospel was published, and consequently before the Apostles were Dead; who, as we have already demonstrated, resided in the fame place with our President, when he writ his Gospel, and confirm'd it with their own Testimony. St. Ferome wou'd have said at the intreaty of the Presbyteries of Afia, (whereof there were several in those parts) if he had meant Presbyters by the word Bishops. For the Petitions of Societies or Bodies of Men must have been made apart, and in feveral places; whereas the Petitions of the Bishops might have been delivered conveniently enough at one and the fame time in a Synod. In like manner Clemens Alexanrinus recounting, what things St. John the Apostle did in Ephofus, after his Banishment Salv. by ainto Patmos, makes mention of the Bishop of rud Euseb the City, who furely could be no one else but . 2.c. 23. the Prefident himlelf: For no one cou'd be properly call'd Presbyter of the City; becaule there were many Presbyters in every City. The fame Writer affirms, that when the same Apostle visited the Provinces ad-H 4

joyning to Ephesus; he appointed Bishon in some places, constituted whole Churches other places and in others wanger wa Tirduan ou. i. e, Ordained one Clerk. In my Opini on now, he supposes Whole Churches to have been in those very places, where St. John Constituted Bishops. This we may gather from the Opposition between the first and fecond Member of the Division. He like wife supposes Ecclesiastical Rulers to k meant by the Name of Churches, fince h opposes eva naffor, i. e. One Clerk to Exnaoiais orais, i. e. Whole Churches, which con fequently must be Composed of all the Cler gy: He supposes a great part of them w have been Converts. Now there were want ing Rulers, to whom the Apostle might Communicate Authority. Thus the Exper of all ban were intirePresbyteries together with their President; and therefore only the Pro sidents are to be understood under the Name of Bishops, who were Constituted in those places, where there was no necessity, that Whole Churches should be appointed. This we fee, that the Apostle did not look upon those to be Whole Churches, that wanted Prefidents to govern them, whom Clemen in this place calls by their proper Name Bishops, and therefore the Apostle every where supplied the Presidents at least under that new Name of Bishops; and otherwise it cou'd not be done fince there were Ilearons desen, or Chief Chairmen of the Presbyteries as we have already observed; for now 'twas high time to take care of Posterity, the de 11 Primacq nop es in Anti-

Primacy of Ferufalem being abolished; and the Apostles that were then present, not like to live much longer. The Apostles, in my Opinion, adorn'd Chief Chairmen with this new Title of Bishaps, hereby to declare them their Successors in the plenitude of their Power; for as we have shown the Word fignifies a supreme Power fubject only to God. Neither is it incredible, that the Apostles had express Revelations as to this affair, altho' we want the Monuments of the latter part of the Apostolical History to prove it. 'Twas fo we are fure when St. John received his Apocalypse in Patmos. There we find them called Angels, who were fent by the President of the Apostolical College to rule the Churches committed to their Care. The Reason is plain, because the Messengers of God, who is the only invisible Bishop, were called Angels. In like manner the Messengers of the President of Jerusalem, were distinguished by that Name, as far as the Name of Bishop belonged to him in common with God. Thus the Name of Bishop was greater than that of Angel; for Angels might be fent by the Bishops, when the Bishops themselves were fent by none but God himfelf. Papias Bp. of Hierapolis, lived next to these times, who, tho' he faw none of these Apostles, yet he conversed with many that had seen them, as also the chief Disciples of our Lord, viz. John the Presbyter, and Ariftion. John the Presbyter was Buried at Ephesus, the chary that the Church below thould dec not exempt the Superior authority of the Apostolical Colthem from lege. This we gather from that paffage in being subject Clemens, where he shews, that one Clergyman formetimes has been inferted by the A. postles into the Ecclesiastical Catalogue: For this was done, where thete was an intire or whole Church, confilling of a due pumber of Presbyters, and a Bishop at the head of them, for that Church wanted only one Clerk to be added to the relt. And therefore it was Lawful for the Apostles, without so much as asking the content of the Bishop, to insert a Clerk into the Ecclefiastical Catalogue. So 'tis plain, that the Bishops had not as yet obtain'd fo high a privilege as to be reckon'd next to God, and be judged by none, but him alone, at least if compared to the Aposiles. There is a particular reafon, why the Bishops might owe Obedience and Submission to the Apostles, which by the very name of the Episcopat they could owe to no other mortal whatever. upon the Church above, fince it could not obtain any Benefits of the Myffical Communion, but to far as it conformed to the Original. But the Original Church of the new Peculium, is no other than that of the Apostles, whose head is the App. or Word, who is also the invisible Bishop: So that as the visible Bishop depends upon the aby G, if he defires that his Acts may be ratified in Heaven; fo likewise upon the Body of the xing, whose head that xing is, and in short upon that Original Body, which is likewise the Original Church. For in vain does the Bishop admit any one into his Communion, unless the same admission confers a right to the Original Church; and on the other hand in vain does the Vifible Bishop exclude us from his Communion, unless that exclusion shuts us likewise out of Therefore the whole authe fame. thority of the Church below is derived from its agreement and concord with the Original above, to that it has no manner of force, if it difagrees with that. This is the true reason, why the Apostles cou'd not confer any power fo large and plenary, as to have any force over themselves, or to exempt the Bishops from Apostolical jurisdiction; for both while they were alive upon Earth, as now after their Death in Heaven, they constituted one Body, whose Head was Christ: neither can the Bishops make us partakers of the Heavenly rights upon any other Foot, than as they build us upon the Foundation of the Apolities, that we may grow up in one Body with with them, as we have shewn elsewhere : For only this Body has ja pretence to claim the Heavenly rights. Therefore the Communion of the Bishop signified nothing, if it addmitted us into any other Body than that of the Apostles, and were invested with no celestial Privileges. This is the reason. why the very name of Bishop declares him. to have a Supreme power over all other Mortals except the Apostles. Thus the Apostles without doing any prejudice to their own Authority, bestowed upon the Bishops, by them created, together with the name a certain power, which was to be transsmitted to their Successors to all ages of the World Otherwise they had given them a meet infignificant shadow of a Name, and the power fignified by the Name had expired of course, after the Death of the Apoftles.

College of bout the year 106, before the Canon of the Gospel was confirmed by them.

I confess 'tis a difficult task, in this so pat establifeed by the affign the precise time, when these Chief Chairman had this new Title of Bishops Ephelus, a- confer'd upon them by the Apostles. However, I hope my performance, will not be unacceptable to those of the Ecclesiastical Function, if I endeavour, as far as I am able, to clear this Difficulty. From what has been faid already upon this head, it evidently appears, that it happen'd after the Martyrdom of Simeon the Son of Cleopas. For the A. postles did not convene at Epbesus under their President St. John before this time, who, as we have proved, beltow'd this Name upon the Chief Chairmen. After this account it must have fallen out after the year of our Lord 104, or 105, upon one of which we placed the Death of Simeon. And vet it must have been before the Death of Istus Bishop of Rome, whom we conjecture to have died A. D. 112. for Irenaus reckons this Xstus the first of those; who celebrated the Feast of Easter, on a different day from that, on which the Afiati Apostles obferved it. And this he must have done after Epist and the Apostolical College at Ephesus was ex Euseb. tinct; for while that was in being, no Bi- Hift. Eccl: shops wou'd have presumed to disagree ! 5. 256 from it, even in their own distincts. We Gr. have already shewn, that no Churches were invested with any power so great as to make innovations at home, but whatever power there was, that it was wholly lodged in the hands of the Apostolical Itineraries, who we cannot fuppose wou'd abolish any of the received customs of the Apostles. Now 'tis certain, that together with the Episcopal Name Xystus had likewise the Authority of a Bishop; and 'tis as undeniable, that there was no example of the Surviving Apostles to the contrary. But when they were once dead, Xystus had a full power, to act according to his own pleasure in indifferent things, at lealt in his own Diocess. I must confess, that this custom of celebrating Easter, which was introduced by Chrystus, seems to be of ancienter date, than the Colony of Ælia Capitolina; for those of Ferusalem were of the same Opinion with the Romans in Victor's time;

time; because, when they were carried down Vict. and thieffer, they still retained the custom, as it Hift. Eccl. was observed at Rome. With this agree the Successions of the Ephesian Bishops, mention'd by Polycrates, w 10 reckons up Seven Bishops all related to him, who fate in that See before him, himself being the Eighth. And so many Successions there were likewise in the Roman See, from Xyftus to Vidor, to whom that Epiftle is addressed. Thus fo ancient we find, was both the Name and power of Bishops in the See of Ephefus. For before the Apostles of the Ephesian College were all extine; the first Bishop of Ephefus could not commence, that's certain. But in other places the Apostles had constituted Bifrops before, while themselves, together with their Prefident, were yet alive. Therefore the Epoch of Episcopat is to be placed in some middle time, between the coming of the Apostles into Asia, and their decease. For my part, I guess it to have been just in the beginning of the Ephesian College. Tis plain, the Bishops were constituted before St. John writ this Gospel, because he is said. to have compiled it at their intreaty. We have already feen, that the Apostles were upon the spot with him, when he writ it, what then should hinder them from being present, when he constituted Bishops? Now, if the Ebioneans were the occasion of the Apostles meeting together in Asia, 'tis certain, it must have been some time after the Martyrdom of Simeon; for after the Apostles were forced to fly from Peraa or Judea, then and and not before did Thebushis afoire to be made Bishop, (of Jerusalem, 'tis probable) who alone had the Name of Bishop at that time. But being disappointed of his hopes there, he made the first Succession of the B. bioneans in Perea itself. Epiphanius informs us, that Nazara was there, from whence they had likewise the Name of Nazarenes. From these parts this Herefie found its way into Asia, to extinguish which in its infancy the Apolites met at Ephefus. 'Tis probable, they were not as yet come into Alia, when the abovemention'd Herefie first appeared there. Hegesippus testifies that the Reverence, the Apostles had over them, restrained them from profeshing an open Separation, therefore we can hardly suppose, that they would have come into Afia, if they had known, that any of the Apostles were there. But one year is fufficient for the two Commotions of the Ebioneans to have happen'd in; as well in Perea, as in Afia, But the Episcopat constituted by the Apostles of Ephesus, cou'd hardly be later, than A.D. 107: For then the Christians made new expeditions, in order to propagate the Faith. One of these was carried into India, lately conquered by Palma, and by this we come to discover the time of the Expedition. At that time, those new Preachers carried the Written feb. Hift. Books of the Gospels along with them into Eccl. 1.3. those places, which they had converted, as 37. Gr. we find in (a) Eusebius. afterwards, which had been brought thither by St. Bartholomew, as 'twas reported; and this was after St. John had Written his Go. spel in Asia; for I am of Opinion, that the Book of the Written Gospels was collected by this Apostolical College at Ephesus, and by them recommended to the Church. We here find mention made of feveral written Gospels, whence 'tis no impertinent conjecture that the Book is meant, wherein the Gospels were collected. We find by the Testimony of Eusebius, concerning Pantanus, that St. Matthew's Gospel made one of the number. and Eusebius expresly tells us, that the three Gospels were approved by St. John in these following words, 'Tis reported, that he approved of them, and witnessed, as to their veracity. Now what occasion was there for him to approve them by his Teltimony, un. less the truth of them had been uncertain, because as yet they had layn hid in a few private hands, and had not appear'd openly and in the publick Light? But from this paffage we may trace out the time; when the Apostle gave this Testimony of them; for being asked his opinion concerning those Evangelists, he observed, that they made no mention of the things done by our Lord, before St. John was calt into prison: for which reason, those of Asia earnestly importun'd him, that he himfelf would be pleased to fupply the defect, which he had remark'd in them. So then 'ris plain, he declared his own opinion concerning the other Evangelists, when he undertook to write his fourth Gospel, which d

ipel, hich which he perform'd in Afia at the instance of the Asiatick Bishops, as we have already obferv'd; and that must consequently be at the fame time, when the Apostolical College was conven'd at Ephefus. And therefore tis probable, that not only his Gospel, but the other three, that were written before, were approved by the Testimonies of the same A. poltles then present. Neither is this all, but tis reasonable to believe, that this Book of the four Gospels so folemnly ratified, was lay'd up in their Archives, that the veracity of it thus confirmed might be known As for the Original Manuscript of Chronic St. John, the Author of the Chronicon Paf- Pafch. chale affirms, that it was kept in Ephesus in his Edit. time. There is no disagreement in the time, p. 5 to make any one disbelieve, what he afferts. I find in Ignatius, that the Gospel of St. Matthew was preserved in the same Archives of Ephefus: I heard, fays he, some saying, that if I don't find it so in the Archives, I won't Ignat. believe the Gospel, and when I told them again, that it was written, they answer'd me ad Phile oti reoxura that it was extant and to be feen. N. 8. It feems Ignatius had produced a passage out of the Gospel of St. Marthew against the Here-(yot the Doceta, wherein Christ is faid to deny, that he was an incorporeal Damon. words were to be found in the Gospel, such as it came from St. Matthew, and then appeal to the Archives, wherein the Authentic copy of St. Matthew was reposited to be confulted by all upon occasion; and therefore they declare, that they will not be determined by the words of the Gospel, as they were found in the common Copies, fince they dif agreed from the Authentic Book, that was war ranted by the publick Faith of the Archives. And when Ignatius urged, that the Reading was so in that copy which he used (for unless I am mistaken, this he means by the words on viscoulas,) the Hereticks reply, that the Authentick copy, to which they had appeal'd, was extant and to be feen, and therefore he might confult it to fatishe himtelf, whether these words belonged to the Evangelist, or no. This I am confident, they mean by the word, weinera, which dire Elly aniwers selitiva, a word commonly used in promulging the Edicts of Princes. Thus we find in St. Jude weinerran Jayus, they were made an example, as the vulgar Interpreter has render'd it, to the end that they might be known by all. Thus whi, is translated proposita, in the ancient Glosfaries, which word is often used to fignific the Latin Decrees of Princes. In like manner Kupina, are things reposited in places for that purpose, but especially in written Monuments. So the Critics call an Author's Text, Kelphos, and Kerrae Signifies the fame as legi, to be read, among Authors of unquestionable credit. Thus we find Ulpian in Atheneus got the name of Kerricele, because when there happen'd any debate 2bout a word, he used always to ask that troublesome question , Karas ; à à zardi that is to lay, was it to be found in any Classick Authors or no? And therefore all Authentick Writings that are laid up in Archives are very properly faid request fince they are repolited there to that end, that an appeal may be made to them, when there Upon which account these is occation. Afatick Archives were to be confulted to find out the true genuine words of St. Matthew; and unless I am mistaken, the veracity of the present Book of the Gospels, which we now use, is derived from the Ephesian Archives. 'Tis reasonable to believe, that Copies approved by fo Authentick a Testimony, as that of the Ephefian College, wou'd immediately be received by all Churches, which at that time acknowleged the Supream authority of that College. Now they were reposited in the Archives, with this intention, 'tis probable, that by this means they might be known to all. This is the reason, why Freneus, a Native of Afia, owns no more, nor fewer Irenzas Gospels than four; because he had found the fame number of Gospels in the Ephesian Archives. Nay Justin Marty, who writ before him, and yet was younger than he, acknowledges the fame number: Not only St. Justin, who was a Samaritan, but Hegesippus, who was a Jew, fall into the fame militake with our Ignatius, who was a Syrian, as not having the Ephesian Archives at hand to confult, 1 2

fult, whereby they might foon have discovered the interpolations of the Ebioneans from the gennine words of Se. Manthew. It cou'd not be expected, that in to thort a compais of time true Copies enough shou'd be distributed to answer the publick occasions; however, we find, that when once good flores of them were dispersed abroad, very few of the Catholicks cited the spurious additions of the Ebioneans, at least they did not cite them, as formerly, for the true words of St. Marthew. Those that lived before, neither name the Authors of the Gospels, to whom they appeal, neither do they quote their Telli monies, fo as we read them in our Gospels, altho' they treat of the fame matters, as ours do; but for the most part they cite the words out of other Gospels, that were atterwards condemn'd. Now Idefire to be informed, what shou'd be the reason of this, but that the Canon of the Gospels was establiffred by the Ephefian College, and as fuch readily embraced and received by all Churches? I am of opinion too, that there might be this farther defign in lodging them in the publick Archives, to make them obtain the force of Laws in the Christian Church. Thus the suffrages of the Athenians acquired the Authority of Laws. fo foon as they were logded in the Temple of Cybele, and the Decrees of the Roman Senate challerged the fame power, when they were reposited in the Treasury of Saturn. Thence we find we neight vino, a Law, which every one was to observe, Efther 1.8. in the atorefaid, faid fignification of the word. And thus St. Bartholomew must needs have lived after these times, if it be true, that he brought the Hebrew and not the Ebionean Text of St. Matthewinto India. As these Archives were Euseb. Hist older than Marcion, I am of opinion, they Eccl. 1. 5 detected the interpolations he had inferred 28. into the Gospel of St. Luke, as Tertullian and Epiphanius inform us, and the like villainous impostures practifed by the Followers of Artemon, which no less differ'd from one another, than they did from the Authentick Texts of the Archives. Otherwife we can hardly imagine, that the Catholicks wou'd have agreed fo unanimously against them in those Texts, that were so lately received into the use of the Orthodox. According to this reckoning therefore the Episcopat will be earlier, than the modern Canon of the Gospels, and yet not lower than A. D. 107. For I am inclined to believe, that these new expeditions of the Christians are to be placed at the same time, with the first Colonies, that were sent into the Conquer'd Provinces of India, or at least with the first commerce, the Roman Subjects had with these vanquished people. We shall not, as I imagine, wander mightily out of our way, if we date the institution of the Episcopar from A. D. 106, so that it might have been a few years, either older or younger than that.

As I have already maintain'd, 'tis certain, The Marthat all this happend before St. Ignatius tyrdom of fuffer'd, tho the generality of Authors are A.D. 112 agreed, that he was Crowned with Martyr. dom under Trajan; but in what year this fell out, is a very difficult matter to determine, especially under to great a Scarcity of Memoirs. His own Epiftles put it beyond all dispute, that he was sent from Syria to Rome, in order to fuffer death there, and confirm the truth of what the Ads agree in, viz. that he was not font thither by the Prefect of Syria, but by the Emperour himself. His Name, which feems to be derived from that of the Egnatian Family, shows him to have been a Roman Citizen belonging to the Colony of Antioch. The Governour could not inflict Capital punishments upon a Reman Citizen, without confulting the Emperour, much less Sentence him to any fuch punishment, as should affect him with servile pain, and make him forfeit his Benefit of the City; and furely condemning a Man to be thrown to wild Beafts, is a punishment of that nature. But much less cou'd the Prefect or Governour Sentence him to be punished without the limits of his Province, and yet that this was the Punishment he was condemn'd to fuffer, his celebrated Epiltle to the Romans sufficiently shews. Therefore 'tis probable from other Memoirs, besides the Adi, that Trajan was at Antioch, when this Septence passed upon Ignatius. Now Trajan was twice at Antioch, first of all, when he undertook his first expedition against the Parthians, because they had disposed of the Kingdom of Armenia, without confulting him in that Affair, viz. we may gather from the Latin Acts, and particularly those in the Cotton Library, which testifie, that Trajan was then upon his march towards Armenia and Parthia; for 'tis evident out of Dion, that the Actions of his first expedition were perform'd in Armenia. Indeed Malela, a fellow Citizen of Ignatius, as being a Native of Antioch, relates it differently, taking his accounts, as may be prefumed, out of the Paschal Fasti of Antioch. Now he reports, that Ignatius suffer'd Martyrdom at the same time, that the great Earth quake happen'd at Antioch, Trajan himself being then in the City. Dion places this Earth-quake in Pedo's Councilship, Malela assigns it to the second year of Trajan's coming into the East. But that both these accounts fall upon, A. D. 114, Pralett, I think I have shown in another place. Which cambd. of these two Opinions is the truer, I am not able to determine, for I think there's no great credit to be given to the Paschal Canons of Antioch, even in their own Affairs, altho' we had a more accurate and Faithful transcriber of them than Malela was. If Malela's accounts are true, the first sopinion, which flatly contradicts them, must certainly be false; for Malela makes Trajan leave Rome in Odober, and not to have reached Antioch before the Month of December: Now, that Ignatius in the Month of August at least, was upon his Journey thither, his own Epistle to the Romans sufficiently shews. In Pedo's Confulship the Emperour passed the better part of the Year in Antioch. Either of the twa, two, I look upon to be true, or at least very probable; But follow which of the two accounts you will, it will be later than the Martyrdom of Simeon, the destruction of the Church of Ferusalem, which despoil'd it of its primacy, and the Epoch of the Institution of the Episcopat.

XXV. The Writ-Commendation of the Epifcopat then vable.

And to fay the truth, his Epiftles wondertings of Ig-fully confirm this, which were all written parius, wit- by him, when he had a near prospect of ed to this Martyrdom. We find not the least mention mention in of the Church of Ferufalem in them, as bebim of the ing overwhelm'd, diffipared, and uncapable Church of of maintaining its former Dignity. Had mat-Jerusalem ters stood otherwise, he had hardly sought now defirm out a parronage for his own Church of Antioch elsewhere, fince Judea and the City of Ferusalem used to be reckon'd in the Province of Syria. Not to take notice, that the remembrance of its Primacy was still fresh in very seaso- peoples Minds, which wou'd have recommended its Authority above that of any other Church whatever, if any power had been left it, amidst so many terrible Shocks and Tumules. This makes it evident, that Ignatius is by no means to be charged with Affectation, which Crime, the Adversaries of his Epiftles, who feem to be utterly unacquainted with our reasons, are pleased to lay at his Door, fince it was absolutely necessary, that the Trestoxages es should be afferted with all the force and vigour imaginable. fingle Controversie was of more importance than all the rest; for apon it depended the whole fabrick of Ecclefiaftical Discipline, as well

Now I have fufficiently shown, that this Power of the Bishops was but in its Infancy, when Ignatius undertook the Defence of it, the former jurisdiction of the Church of Jerusalem being wholly extinet and abolished. And in this Sense the verteend take, or New Regulation of Ignatius, as our Adversaries wou'd have it, might well enough be understood, if there were any Necessity for it; but the learned Pearson has demonstrated, that we need not put this Con-Struction upon Ignatius's Words: Therefore unless some new power had been substituted into its room, the whole Discipline of the Church had been intirely ruin'd, and all forts of Rebells as well as Hereticks as Schifmaticks. and prophane impious Offenders, might have trampled upon it at pleasure. Thus there was a Necessity to urge and maintain this new Power, till it was every where acknowledged by fuch as were fubject to it, and till Men were accustomed to obey it. Now all this exactly agrees with the Exigence of these

We may eafily perceive, that in these Passages he alludes to the received Opinion, which taught People formerly to adhere to the Church of Ferusalem for the sake of our Lord's flesh, while any of his Kinsmen were to he found in it. He formetimes compares the Presbyteries of his time with the first and supreme Apostolical College of the Ferusalem Clergy: The Bishop sitting in the place of God, and the Elders in the place of the Sanedrim of the Apostles: to the Magnes. c. 6. Be subject also to the Presbytery, as to the Apostles of Fesus Christ, who is our hope: to the Trall. c. 2. And again below: The Prefbyters, as the Sanedrim of God, and the bond of the Apostles, c. 3. Now to what purpose speaks he this, but to let the World Supreme Power understand . that the of the Apostolical Sanedrim of Feru-Salem was then lodged in the respective Presbyteries? Pursuant to this Doctrine he thus declares himself to those of Smyrna: Follow the Bishop, all of you, even as Jesus Christ followed the Father, and the Presbytery, as the Apostles. to the Smyrn, c. 8. So likewife on the other Hand he teaches, that the very fame Respect is to be paid to the Apoftles, which was due to the Presbytery of the Church: And to the Apostles, as to the Prefbytery of the Church. to the Philadelph. c. 5. Neither was this to be looked upon as the Worthipping of God (to the Smyrneans, c. 9.) but the Devil, and consequently most ungrateful to him, and deferving an Expiation. And all this, upon the account of the Law of God, which being to be learnt at Ferufalem, made it be called the Holy City, in preference to all others, even by the Canonical Christian Writers of the New Tellament, and was the Reason, why God chiefly manifested himself there in his Punishments. For God received all Holy Things into Mat. 4. 5. his own Patronage; and the holier any thing c. 27. 53. was accounted, to much the speedier and severer Vengeance was to be taken on those, that had violated it. The Hellenistical Writers call the Law sproan, or the Command: and in imitation of their Stile the Writers of the New Testament use the same Expresfion. After the Example of both these, St. Ignatius owns the fame of the Bishops of his time, at least with the Presbyteries subject to them. And to the Trallians: being fubjest to the Bishop, as to the Law or Commandment and likewife to the Presbytery, c. 13. Tis plain he imitates the Stile of Jerusalem in both these places, and probably with this Defign, to let them know, that the fame Punishments, which the violaters of the Law and Commandment were to expell from God in Jerusalem, under the inspection of the High Prieft, or Bishop of that City. ought to be dreaded in other Churches, if any Man, who was under the Government of his Bishop, rebell'd against the New Law of the Gospel, which was to be written in the Thus 'twas a received Custom with the Jews in their Disputes with the Samaritans, to own no other Meetings as legal and valid, but fuch as were kept at Jerufalem under the High Priest of that City: That only those Sacrifices were pleasing to God, and that only those annual Assemblies at the Pasfoever, the Pentecost, and the Feast of Taber nacles, were to be looked upon as a due obferving of the Law, and to be rewarded with those Blessings, that were promised to such, as observed it: But that if any one offer'd Sacrifices elsewhere, or celebrated the Festivals enjoyn'd by the Law eliewhere, he by no means fatisfied the Law, neither cou'd he expect the Rewards promised to the fulfillers of it by God the Lawgiver: And confequently, that all

all these things were null and void, if perform'd in any other place, than Ferufalem. Our Bleffed Lord himfelf owns all thefe things to be true in his Discourse with the Woman of Samaria: For in this fenfe are thefe words to be understood; Salvation is of the Fews, St. John 4. 22. Because the Salvation promised to the chosen Flock was annexed to those solemn Sacrifices and Affemblies, that were celebrated in Ferusalem, and not to those upon Mount Gerizim. Thus, even those very Ceremonies, that were strictly enjoyn'd by the Law, became infignificant, and forfeited all pretence to a Reward, if kept in any other place, than what was prescribed by the Law. This gives us some light towards the Understanding of Ignatius, where he positively afferts that those meetings, which brokeoff Communion with their Bishop, were not Belaios, or valid; for thus he writes to the Magnefians: Such persons feem not to me to carry goodConsciences because they don't meet Belaius, i. e. Regularly, or Orthodoxly, according to the Command. He means that all fuch Meetings, in the strict interpretation of the Law, were illegal, and therefore deserved not the benefits of Lawful Asfemblies. He affirms the same of the Euchariftical Sacrifice of the New Covenant in his Epistle to the Smyrneans, Let that Sacrifice of Thanksgiving be esteemed Becaia, i. e. valid, which is either perform'd under the Bishop, or by his order by another. Now what he means by his Euxagisia Belaia, he plainly shews in his Epistle to the Ephesians: Unless a Man is within the Altar, he is deprived of the

the bread of God. From this place 'tis evident, that in Ignatius's Opinion, that only is the true and proper Euchariff which makes us pertakers of the Heavenly one. As all this is exprest in the very Language of Ferufalen. fo it afferts the Rights of that Church to all other Churches. But it may be objected, that thefe are only Confequences drawn out of his Writings, tho fair and obvious. Well then let us come to more open and direct Proofs. Every one knows, that the High-Priest of the lews, and after him the Bishop of Terufatem, challenged by a peculiar Right to be the principle of the Mystical Union, as being Prefident of that only Altar, which was granted to the Jews no where, but at Ferusalem, for the sake of their Sacrifices. Thus fosephus speaking in the person of his Le. giflator; In the other Cities let there be neither Altar, nor Temple; for God is one, and the race of the Hebrews is one. He had instructed them before, that even in the Holy City it felf, it was not lawful to have more Temples, or more Aftars: Let there, fays he be but one Temple, and one Alear there. The reason of which was, because the High Priest of the Jews, as * Migratio * Philo informs us, was supposed to represent p. 404. De the xby G, as the Original High Priest, and from hence they inferr'd, that as they were made partakers of the Sacrifices offer'd by the High Prieft; fo by the benefit of the Divine compact they might become partakers of the Heavenly Sacrifices offer'd by the x679, and of the Unity, and Holy Commerce with the 1370 and his Father; but on the other hand and that they were to be excluded from the Benefits of the Heavenly Sacrifices, if ever they alienated themselves from the Sacrifices of the High Priest. Nor do the Apostles argue otherwise in the case of the Church of Ferusalem. Thus St. Fohn the Apostie: That ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Fesus Christ. We have already obferved, that there was a xorrovia, or Fellowship of Cities, and consequently, that this exactly fuits with the Church of Ferusalem: And St. Paul teaches us, that there was a Fellowship of Sacrifices, 1. Cor. 10. As well Fewish, v. 18- as Gentile, v. 20. and Eucharistical, v. 16. 21. Thus Ignatius sometimes compares the Bishop with God the Father, who being the Head of Christ, is confequently the chief principle of Unity. To the E. phesians: Let us take care not to disobey the Bishop, that we may be subject to God, c, 5. To the Smyrnears: 'Tis a good thing to know God and the Bishop: He that bonours the Bishop is honoured of God, c. 9. Thus to the Trallians: And the Bishop, as him who is the figure of the Father. This passage is otherwife read in the Modern Greek, but is to be thus amended out of Antiochus and the Interpolator. To the Magnesians: The Bishop sit. ting in the place of God. c. 6. Sometimes he compares him to Christ himself, the logos, To the Ephesians: 'Tis therefore manifest. that we ought to look upon the Bishop as our Lord. To the Smyrneans: Wherever the Bi-Shop appears, there let the multitude be, as where where Jesus Christ is, there is the Catholick Church, c. 8. And in the matter of Unity, he ascribes all to the Bishop; nay, he joyns the Unity of God with the Bishop's Sane. To the Philadelphians: Therefore our drim. Lord forgives all that Repent, provided they Repent to the Unity of God, and the Sanedrin of the Bishop, c. 8. And in the same Epistle yet more expresly: Endeavour therefore to partake of one Eucharist, for one is the flesh of our Lord Fesus Christ, and one Cup towards the Unity of his Blood: One Altar, as one Bishop, with the Presbytery and Deacons my fellow Servants; that whatever you do, you may do it after God's Will, c. 4. And to the Magnefians, having advised them, that no rhing was to be done without the Bishop and his Presbyters; a little after he subjoyns these words: There is one Fefus Christ, than whom nothing is more excellent; therefore run all of you together, as it were to one Temple of the Lord, as it were to one Altar, and one Fefus Christ proceeding from one Father, &c. Tis plain therefore he means by this one Temple, and this one Altar the one Eucharistical Sucrifice of every Bishop. He concludes, that by this one Sacrifice, we are likewise admitted to the Mystical Unity with one Christ, and with one Father. this sense is to be understood the following passage: The Bishops, that determine the boun. daries are of our Lord's Opinion, to the Ephe Jians, c. 3. felves. I am apt to believe, that this form of speaking is borrowed from the Roman Senate. For there were some Senators, that had a right of giving their Votes, and declaring their Opinion in their own Words: This Opinion in Greek is called yroun; and fo likewife is the person, who brought it in Writing to the Senate. There were also other Senators, that had no right to give their Opinion; but when the Houle came to be divided, then they went over to the Opinion of others. These were the Pedarij, of whom A. Gellius makes mention in his Notes Attica, 1. 3. c. Now these were supposed to be of the same group with him, whose Sentence they approved by going over to his Party. And therefore Ignatius's meaning must be, that there was no room in the Church for different Opinions concerning matters of Faith, but that all were obliged to affent to what Christ had appointed. Thus we read of out fing yvoun, or an Unanimous Confent, 2. Macc. 11, 20. Thus likewise in the Inscription of his Epistle to the Philadelphians, he Stiles their Bishop with his Preshyters and Deacons, approved in the Opinion of Christ. To these he opposes such as walked in anno-Tgia yrdun, in a different Opinion, c. 3. and afted contrary to Ti youn, the Opinion, or Will of God: But in that first passage to the Ephelians he afferts, that all thele things belong to all the B shops in the World; from whence 'tis evident, that the Apostles left them all equal to one another. I cannot but remark en passant, that the genuineness of these Epiltles Epistles is sufficiently confirmed by so many places, that are fo exactly fuited to the Humour and Genius of those times. He must have been a very dexterous Impostor indeed. that could so handsomely counterfeit the Language and Doctrine of this Age, the very remembrance of which was in a manner loft

Will they confels that there were Pompey's lovers of the highest. places, that cou'd endure no equals; and will they not at the fame time own there were Cafir's in the Presbyteries, that were full as impatient to have any Superior? Had theseContells and Disputes happen'd between the two parties, confider I befeech you, what a horrid scandal this must have given to the Fews and Gentiles, and how fatally detrimental it must have prov'd to the common Welfare of Chriflianity? And yet we find not the least footstep of Scandal given by these Disorders, and fo far was our holy Religion from receiving any detriment, that on the other hand the Christian Faith extended it self to the remotest parts of the Universe in this very period of time we are talking of; Herefies were stifled in the cradle, Expeditions undertaken in Trajan's Reign for the Propagation of the Gospel, and the Discipline of the Church never fo flourishing and vigorous as towards the middle of this Century. Suppose the Presbyters of two or three Cities did patiently submit to the Yoke, yet who can imagine that they were of the same passive complexion all the World over? Had never so few of them joyn'd to affert their common Liberties, what profound Reafons will our Adversaries find out to shew why the Presbyters were always beaten out of the Field, and the Tree.

and that if even this Majority embraced any other Communion, than that of the Bishop, they were not to expect the Benefits of Communion. Therefore they must either suppose, that this right of the Healoxades es was of ancienter date, than the Name of Bishop became peculiar to that Order, or else that they acquired it at the same time with their new Name. If the first, 'tis easy to account for the giving them this new Name; but the mischief on't is, that our Adversaries will gain nothing by this: for while they own the thing fignified by the Name to be ancient, 'twill be meer Impertinence to fquabble about the Name. But if they shall pretend that the thing together with the Name was changed, the abovemention'd difficulties will again crowd upon us; as how it was poffible for so great a change to be carried on in fo many places at once, and that in the space of to few years, especially being destitute of both Right and Force to support it, and likely to meet fo much opposition from the oppress'd Party? Now our Hypothesis will furnish us with an eafy reason, how this change of the Name came to prevail in all places, and that in fo thort a time; for fince the Rights of the Church of Ferusalem legally devolved upon these Tewloudseder, what occasion was there for any one to oppose them; nay, on the other hand, were not all good Men obliged in conscience to allow and maintain them? The very Intention of a Chief Seat excluded all Rivals and Competitors whatever, Neither could any just Exception be made to their Persons, whom the aforesaid Devolution found settled in the Chief Seats by the last Itinerary Ministers of the Apostolical Church of Ferusalem. There was no reason therefore to doubt, but that these Persons, whom that Apoltolical Churchhad judged worthy of the Chief Seat among their own People, were likewise thought worthy by them of the Rights that were hereafter to devolve upon the Chief Seats. There is no Mystery of Iniquity in all this, but on the other hand every thing exactly conformable to the Approbation of the Apostolical Church, as far as we can guess at it by what happen'd before. Neither did this Devolution of ours depend upon the Motions of particular Churches, which might have been attended with various Events, according to the variety of Places and Men. The entire destruction of the Church of Ferusalem was of it self a reason sufficient, that the devolution of that an. cient Right should fall upon all the Churches of the World, and their Mewloudheden: And to by this means an accession of new Power might at last come to them. Nor have we any reason to wonder if the new Name of a new, but an Acknowledged and Legal Power was afterwards receiv'd in all places without any helitation or clamor. As for the Ewigxowos, or Pre- on proper to fects of the Attick Cities, 'tis plain, we God, from have nothing to do with them here. If any bence trans-thellenisms crept amongst those of Jerusalem, the Priests, they may thank the Macedonians, those especially Conquerors of the World, who were Origi. those of the nally Derians, for them, and not the Athe- highest nians. But I don't find, that the Macedonians ever nsed the Word in this Signification. and as for the Athenians, they had loft the use of the Word long before, together with their Foreign acquifitions. They had no Cities abroad that owned their Jurisdiction, and over whom they cou'd place thefe 'Ewiskowos neither under the Roman Empire, nor yet when they were subject to the Macedonians. This use of the Word therefore cou'd not possibly be taken any where else, than out of the Books of the Athenians, with which the fews had no manner of commerce; So that they cou'd not borrow Words from them that were daily used by the Government then received. Much less does that Episcopatus mentioned by Cicero, whereby Pompey made him Prefect of the maritime Coast of Campania, fignifie any thing towards the Ecclefiaftical use of the Word. The Word, as tis employed in that Signification, has no relation to Cities, tho' 'tis plain, the Eccletialtical use of the word makes it peculiar to them. For my part I am of opinion, that the figuification of the word is to be fetch'd elsewhere. The

After the same manner is the Word used by Philo, who comes much nearer to the Stile of the New Testament, for he was a 7ew, as well as the Apostles were before they embraced the Faith of Christ, and lived in the same age with them. Speaking therefore of the Departure of Abraham, he fays: These are thoughts. In word o deds emenoned, of whom God alone is the Inspector, p. 400. and afterwards, ibid. This therefore is the primary fignification of the Word, as far as it concerns our present disquisition, and from hence it descended to others, who represented the Person of God, but especially to Priests, and other intimate Friends of God, in which number were the Priefts above the People, and particularly the chief Priests of all. Thus Plutarch calls the Augurs Ewionowork ounaxes, 1. 3. The Overfeers and keepers of the Divinatory Art borrowed from Birds and Prodigies. After the fame manner as we observed the Emissiones, y dunques, to be joyn'd togather before, in Relation to the Gods. Now it appears, from Dion and other Writers that the Augurs were reckon'd among the Priests. He that came nearest to the Example of the High Priest among the Fews, and consequently of the Christian Bishops, was the Pontifex Maximus or Chief Pontiff of the Romans. who was above all the other Priefts. Plutarch applies this very word to him, and describes him after such a manner, as if he had been describing a Christian Bishop. Duoras EMIZKOMON, &c. supervising those that facrificed aright, prohibiting what was appointed by Law to be transgressed, and teaching whatever was necessary for worshipping the Gods, or deprecating their Anger. He was also of isean was bevon imonows, Superviser of the Holy Maids, whom they call the Vestal Virgins. Here he places the Vestal Virgins under the cognisance of the Existing, who we know were chastised by the Pontifex Maximus if they committed any overfight in the Sacred rites committed to their charge. We therefore see, after what Example the Chri-Itian Virgins were intrusted to the Bishop's inspection, after they had formed themselves into separate Societies. In the same place Plutarch joyns togither the Offices of Epifeo. pus and Doctor, as he has done in the Life of Lycurgus, where we find the following passage, Eकाठमान शहर पहेड कर्विन बड़, में कित कार मिंड पा की प्रशाoiman, i.e. Overseeing the Youth, and teaching them Something useful. For the Chief Priests used to teach the younger Priests, as Gellius, informs us, that the junior Vestal Virgins were instructed by the oldest of that Society in the last ten years of their Function. chiefly

But hiefly chiefly the Pontifiex Maximus did this, who was not only Superior to the Priests of his own Order, but likewise to all of that Sacred Employment, nay, and inspected the private Sacrifices and Rites. He also pronounced their Vows and led up those that Sung the Sacred Verses, although they were We find in Livy, that he did this Laics. when the first Decius devoted himself, and in other folemn Vows of the Magistrates. By this it appears, how justly the Apostle joyn'd the Office of Teaching to the received Signification of the Word Episcopus. Scholiast of Aristophanes in his Notes upon the Nubes calls the Pylagora, who offer'd the common Sacrifices of all Greece in the Amphilityonian Council, by the name of emionorous or Bishops. Philo bestows the Lib. de. like Signification upon the Word, calling A- rer. diu. braham himself Exionore, as being privy Hared. to the Divine Secrets, which properly be. p. 485. longed to the Priests, Upon the same account he applies the very fame Word to the high Priest of the Fews- 1. de Temulentia. He is intrusted, says he, once a year to emter and. Evionomen abeala andois, to overfee the things, which'tis lawful for no one elfe to behold, p. 260. Therefore the use of this word perhaps came from the High Priest of the fews, and the Sanedrim of Ferusalem, to the chief Order at least of the Christian Clergy of that City, but especially to the Prefident of that order. We find the word Ewioxown, applied to the Apostolical Office in the holy Writers; and the Author of the supposititious Pieces, that goe under the name of Clemens, might borrow his notion perhaps from Writers of good credit and ancienter than himself, that now are loft when he call'd St. Fames the Bishop of Bishops. As that Author writes more like a Poet, than an Historian (tho' at the same time it must be confessed, he lived at no great distance from the Apostolical Age) so he suits his Language to the decorum of those times. So then, if St. James was call'd Bishop in his own proper right, the name might well enough devolve from him to the Hewlord Bed et of other Churches, after the fame manner, as we have shown the other rights belonging formerly to the Church of Ferusa. lem to have devolved upon them-

Ignatius, and the Christians his Contemporaries hold the fame concerning the primary fignification of this Word, namely, that it properly belongs to God, and not to Men, and to God, as he is the principle of the Mystick unity. For this reason in his Epistle to Polycarp he joyns the Unity of God and the Episcopar: I pray, that you may be always confirmed in our Lord Jesus Christ, in whom abide in the Unity of God, and the emonown, or Episcopat. For to the Florence M. S. reads it, and Bishop Usher's Latin Interpreter of the genuine Ignatius, and not emonorous, as the Aug/burg Manuscript has it. The Holy Scriptures denote that Mystical Unity by one Head, fo that only those can be faid to be one, who belong to one common Head. But the writers of the New Testa

But the Holy Ghost is rather the Bond of Unity, than the Head of itcertain, that this Unity, which is attributed to God, is taken from the unity of Matrimony, because the Writers both of the Old and New Testament reprefent God as a Husband, and the chofen Flock as his Spouse. But the Holy Ghost is in no part of the Bible called the Husband of the Peculium. Indeed to carry on the Matrimonial Metaphor, the Holy Ghost is not called a Husband, but the Earnest, or the Antenuptial present, 2 Cor. c. 1.22.c.5.5. Epbes. 1. 13. and 14. for he is often call'd a Gift. In like manner Ignatius afcribes the Episcopat to these two persons of the Trinity: To the Father, in his Epistle to the Magnesians, where telling them, that 'tis their Duty to obey Damas their Bishop: and not bim, says he, but the Father of Jesus Christ the Bishop or emorious of all. St. Luke 10. 16. St. Mat. 10. 40. St. John 13. 20. Thus the affronts offer'd to the Bishop, redounded upon the Father and the Son, according to Ignatius: as those offer'd to the Apollles redounded upon the fame, according to our Lord; and this very justly, fince our Saviour spoke these words concerning the Discipline which was to be established in the Church forever. And therefore if this right is to be reckon'd among the hereditary rights of the Apostles, 'tis plain, that when their College was extinct, it was to defrend together with the other rights of that College to their. We find the express words of the compact in Sr. Mar. 16. 19. What soever thou shalt bind on Earth shall be bound in Heaven, and what somer thou shalt loose on Earth, shall be loosed in Heaven. This was faid to St. Peter, but elsewhere we find it said to all the Apostles, St. Mat. 18. 18. St. John 20. 23. and confequently quently to the Bishops, the Successors of the Apostles. To Bind, fignifies the same as to deliver over to Satan, 1. Cor. 5. 5. 20. for Satan is faid to bind, St. Luke 13. 16. which allusion is taken from those Magick Ligan res or Knots, by which Sorcerers, who after by the help of evil Damons, used to perform their Enchantments. Now because the external Symbol of these Sorcerers was binding therefore the invisible Energy of the Devil was called by the fame Name, that it might feem to answer the external Symbol. Thence the word naladededas to be bound fignifies the fame as gaguanes das to be bewitched, with the Attlck Rhetoricians. See Harpecration upon the Word, and Valefius's Notes upon Thus one may be faid to be bound when he is deliver'd over to Satan, which according to the Doctrine of the Apostolical Age, actually happened, when one was turned out of the Communion of the Church For the Holy Scriptures acknowledge no medium between Christ and Belial; fo that those whomChrist wou'd not own for his were be lieved to belong to Belial. After the same man ner therefore a Man is faid to be bound in Har ven, when Christ the invisible Bishop exeludes him from the protection of the Mi nistring Spirits, who are fent forth to Mi nister for them, who shall be Heirs of Salvation, Heb. 1. 14. and when he opens the Gates of Hell, who has the Keys of Death and Hell, Revela. 1.18. for then it will be in the power of these envious Spirits, to exercise the cruelty of their nature, upon those that are ejected out of the Flock. On the other hand our Lord opposes loofing to this binding that proceeds from Satan; and ought not this Woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan has bound in thefe eighteen years, be toosed from this Bond on the Sabbath day? For the Prince of the Age to come has, and was believed to have the Keys of both States in his custody, so that he had a full power over the Age to come, viz- over Heaven and Hell. Our Lord gave to St. Peter the Keys of Heaven, and in his person not to the Bishop of Rome alone, but to all Bishops whereever they were constituted, in the opinion of St. Cyprian. This is they Key of David, which who foever has, he openeth, and no Man shutteth, he shutteth and no Man openeth, Revel. 3. 7. All this rightly agrees with the perfon of Christ, who is the invisible Bishop. Therefore when our Lord deliver'd thefe Keys to the Visible Bishop, he took upon him to shut the Gates of Heaven to those, whom the visible Bishop thrusts out of his Communion, and in like manner, to open-Heaven to those, to whom the Bishop opens the Doors of his Communion. And indeed to shut Heaven and to open it, fignifies exa-Elly the same as to bind and loose; and therefore when our Saviour intrusted St. Peter with the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, he afterwards adds: and what soever thou shalt bind on Earth, shall be bound in Heaven, and what soever thou shalt loofe on Earth Shall and therefore must be understood in the same.

Thus like wife, we find the form of a Compact in these words: Who soevers sins ye remitt, are remitted to them, and who seevers ye retain, are retained; Exactly agreeing with that Expression of the Apostle. To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive alfo. 2Cor 2.10 For as St. Paul deputed the Corinthians to act for him in his absence, and ratified the abfolution of the Incestuous Brother, which the Church of Corinth had granted him in that Apostle's Name; the same conduct will our Saviour observe in relation to the Apostles. and ratify the Remission or Retention of Sir ners, according as they pronounce Sentence. Thus he foretells, that his Name shall be in the Angel or Hornet, whom he appointed to conduct his chosen People to the Land of Camaan, and therefore advises them not to be retractory or stubborn, for that the Angel, who was invested with the Name of God, would not forgive them in case they trespals'd against their Duty. to escape the invisible one; and Ananias and Sapphira found fatal experience, that it was the Holy Ghoft whom they provoked by the Cheat they intended to put upon the Apostles. Moles often affures the rebellious I/raelites that they finn'd neither against himself nor Aaron, but against the Lord God, who wou'd chaftise them feverely for their disobedience. 'Twas areceived opinion in all Ages and Countries of the World, that whoever injured or infulted holyMen must expect thatGodwou'd call.him to a strict account. Thus we often find the Kings of Israel reprov'd upon the account of that Holy People: and this I could confirm by many instances out of Pagan History, did I professedly undertake the handling of this Argument. But it most visibly appear'd in the mutinies of the Israelites about the Priesthood of Aaron: for those who aspired to that Dignity had not Moses, much less Aaron, but God himself for their Enemy. Neither was it an opinion only embrac'd by the Fews or Chrifians, that the Priefts take the Person and Name of God upon them, while they are dignified with that Sacred Function. I don't know whether the words of the Greek Interconcerning Seth don't allude to this. Gen. 4. 26. He boped to be called by the Name of God. We own that he was not called by the Name of his God, however he had his Cognomination from God, at least fo as to be called the Servant, or the Priest of God, after the same manner as in Gen. 14. 18. On the other hand, the Names of fuct as were expell'd from the Sacred Rites, were prophane, and not fo much as to be mention't in Conversation. 'Tis plain that Ignatius cor form'd his stile to both these Customs- The Name of God conferr'd the right of the Divine Patronage both respects, either in the Calling, or elfebeing Cognominated by him After the same manner do's the Apostle St. Fohnargue, where he fays, That who soever had a fellowship with him, had a Fellowship likewise with the Father and the Son. names here the fame Persons of the Trinity upon whom Ignatius bestow'd the name of Bi Jhops, and whom he likewise owned to be the Heads of the Mystical Unity; intimating here by that unless we keep up a fellowship with

The Athenians as well, as the Patriarchs of the younger Fews, had their 'Andgodos, who gather'd in their Revenues; and therefore we find Judas condemn'd for vic. realfar.9 lating the rights of Hospitality and mutual St. Mark Friendship; for which reason among other 4. 10. Sr. Qualifications requir'd in a faithful Steward, it was none of the least, to get ready food for his Fellow servants at a seasonable time. St. Paul reckond his Apoltolical Function to confift in this Oeconomy, and 'tis manifest that our Lord took into his confideration the care of the foreign Poor. But when after his death numbers of Converts embraced the Go. fpel, as the Houshould became greater, & the Stewardship became more burdensome The Temple of Ferusalem maintain'd Widows, Strangers, and in short all forts of Poor, with the Tenths of every third year: and therefore that the New Peculium might not even in this respect fall short of the Old, the Apofiles undertook this troublesome Province upon themselves, and supported this charge out of the Patrimonies of the Godly, which they fold and threw into one common Bank. Afterwards as the numbers of the Poor increased; and a murmuring arose of the Hal-Lenists against the Hebrews, because their Widows were neglected in the daily Ministrasion, the Apostles thought it expedient to constitute Deacons for this purpose, that they might 1-416 might not be oblig'd to leave the Word of God, and serve Tables, Acts 6.2. From this passage we learn by the by, that the Apostolical Office comprehended both these things. and was compatible with the Supervising of the necessities of the Poor. We read that the price of these Estates was laid down at the feet of the Apostles, who represented the Person of God in this affair. This gives us the true meaning of those words to Ananias: Thou hast not lied unto Men, but unto God: and to Sapphira; How is it, that ye have agreed to tempt the Spirit of the Lord, ver. 9. For God takes upon Himself the Patronage of the Poor, of Widows, of Strangers, and the like, who are destitute of human relief; and therefore this care, fince it respected God Almighty, might in true propriety of Speech be called Ewioxown. Now this charitable provision for the Poor was not confin'd folely to Ferufalem, but other Churches likewise took the same measures. The Apostle teaches us I Tim. 5. 9, and 16. that Widows were registred in the publick Catalogues of the Churches, and maintain'd out of the Stipends belonging to the same; and ibid. 6. 18, 19. that the Stores of Wealthy Men were laid up for a common use. As for Strangers, not only fuch went under that Denomination, who leaving their Country Worship, embraced the 1 Cor. 9. Christian Faith, and forfeiting their Patrimo- 5. nies upon that score, knew not how to maintain themselves, but likewise all those that were despoiled of their Estates for the common cause of Religion, as Martyrs, and Confestors, and those that travell'd abroad to carry on the same common Cause, as Apostles, Evangelists, and the Itinerary Ministers of all forts belonging to the Church of Ferusalem. And not these only, but their Wives also, to enable them to promote Christianity among those of their own Sex. The extended charity and hospitality of that Age, which was the chief part of Fellowship among all the Churches of the World, comprehended all these Persons, whom the Canonical Writers Itile The housbould of the Faith; because they Gal. 5. 10. were maintain'd by the Lord's Table, by the spontaneous Oblations offer'diat the Altar, and by the publick stipends of the Church. For the Church of the living God is called the House of God, 1 Tim. 3. 15. and is likewise opposed to private Houses, ver. 5. So that God himself was the Paterfamilias, or chief Master of this House, whereof the Governors of Churches were only the Stewards: indeed that publick Table, which was deltined to publick uses, exactly answer'd the management of a Family. Of the same nature were the publick provisions of Meat and other Necessaries in the Prytaneum of the Athenians, and the Syssitia of the Lacedemomians. The Apostle mentions the Steward of a City, and feveral Monuments of the Ancients expresly inform us that there was a right of Hospitality observed between particular Cities. As therefore in the Church of ferusalem, the distribution of these Alms belongd long'd to the Apostles; so in the foreign Churches the Presbyters were intrusted with it, who are likewife call'd Bishops. This we gather from that very passage, which the Presbyterians have so strangely wrested to their own Meaning: Oi xaxos Teses ores, &c. Let. the Elders that rule well be accounted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in Word and Dottrine, 1 Tim. 5.17. The Apostle no where intimates that these necessaries were Laics; but this he fairly fuggelfs, that tho' it belong'd to all the Presbyters in general negisary, to rule, yet it did not belong to them, quatenus Presbyters, to labour in the Word and Doctrine. These People did not know what was the true meaning of the word neisad. But the abovemention'd Apostle we fee joyns it with was egyor, where it fignifies to maintain good works: namely in the fame fense as Dorcas is said to be full of good works, and Almes-deeds, which she did: and the rich are commanded, that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate, 1 Tim. 6. 18. Thus St. Cyprian delivers himself in his Book de Opere & Eleëmosynis, where he has other things relating to this purpofe: nor do's Justin Mar. tyr talk otherwise, who makes the chief Office of the neges we to confilt in providing for such as were in want. Now altho' he mentions onely one of this fort, yet the Holy Writers make them many, by reason of the above. mentioned change. The Office of a Thesatrus among the Athenians, who supervised the performers, or Foreign Sojourners, was not much different from it; for every Foreigner lay under the lash of the Law of Rebellion, unless he procur'd an Athenian to appear in his behalf, and plead his cause in the Forum at Athens. These pilosnos, or Sojourners were reckon'damong the Strangers; who, as we have already observed, belonged to the care of the Ecclefiaffick neges ws, or Governor. Of the fame nature too were the Roman Patroni, fince they took not only the meaner fort of their own Citizens, but Foreigners also into their Patronage by publick Tables, some of which made of Brass are still extant. Thus in the case of foreign Presbyters, Hesisand, and to labour in Word and Dottrine, exactly answer'd one another, as the Ministry of the Word and of the Tables did in the case of the Apostles; for the former enjoy'd the first place among the Clergy of the foreign Churches, as the Apostles did in that of Jerufalem. There were likewise some of these, who by reason of the similitude of their Office went under 2 Cor. 8 the Name of Apostles, being call'd Apostles of the Churches; that by this Denomination they might be diffinguish'd from the Apostles belonging to the Church of Ferufalem. thefe perhaps might be fuch as gather'd Alms in the suburban Villages. 'Tis certain however, that the very place where we find them mention'd, shews that they were imploy'd in relieving those Strangers, that travell'd upon the fcore of Religion: Now the Holy Scriptures teach us that the Distribution of Alms belonged belonged in common to them both, whether they are called Presbyters or Bishops. Thus St. Peter the Apostle advises his Fellow-Presbyters; Feed the Flock of God which is among you, Emission fevres, or taking the overfight thereof not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready Mind. Neither as being Lords over God's heritage, but being examples to the Flock, 1 Pet. 5. 2, 3. All these Expressions allude to the Money-affair. They are said to feed the Flock of God, which is the meaning of emonoral in its proper fignification, in the same sense we just now gave it, whereby this Episcopat is referr'd to God. 'Tis certain that emonomer un avayuais, or, as we render it, to have the overfight not by constraint, fignifies the same, as in St. Paul to give grudgingly, or out of necessity; to which he opposes a cheerful Giver, I Cor. 9.7. The word aigeonigo as alludes to the fame alacrity in giving, by which it is intimated, that it wou'd be fifthy lucre for a man to misapply the publick Alms of the Church to private uses. Nor are the following words to be interpreted otherwise, if they are rightly understood. By the name of Kane, we are not to understand Men, but those Parrimonies, which when they were fold were laid aside for the use of the Poor; therefore fach a one may be said Kalanvadien, or to Lord it, who for manages this facred Patrimony, as if it was his own, and he was the true Proprietor of it, in which sense Kiele, do's not fignify Domination, but Proprety.

For this is properly Kalanverd'ew, when a Man converts those things to his own use, of which he is not the Kies, or Proprietor. Then the meaning of the word Tung, or Ex. ample, is this, that it was a matter of good example, faithfully and uprightly to acquit one felf of a Charge, accordingly to the Intention of him that intrusted us. Thus we find nothing in the whole Office of a Presbyter, such as 'tis here describ'd, that may not be referr'd to the Eleemofynary affair. in the case of those Persons, whom St. Luke calls as well Presbyters, Ads 20. 17. as Biships ver. 28, St. Paul proposes his own Fidelity and Care in managing the pnblick Money, as an Example for them to write after. Nay, he reminds them how he had fupported himself by his own Handy-labour, that he might not be a burden to the Church. At last he draws this Inference: I have shewed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak and to remember the words of the Lord Fesus, bow he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive, ver. 35. Who do's not discover here at first fight, that the Apostle is discoursing of the Treasures of the Church, which were to be laid out in relieving the necessities of the infirm, and that the true delign of his whole Harangue is to represent to his hears that they ought rather to give out of their own Stock, than receive from the Church even those things, that were due to them for the administration of their Office? gives them ver. 28. about feeding the Flock. over which the holy Ghost has made you'Enisκοποι, or Overseers; all tends to this Point. He hints to them that it was not his Flock. as we have already shewn, which was to be maintain'd out of the publick Treasures, that they were not his Treasures by which they were to be maintain'd; and moreover that it was not his Episcopat, that impos'd upon them the Office of feeding the Flock, but that it was enjoyn'd them by the Holy Ghoft. From all which he might justly draw this Conclusion, that they were as well to take heed of themselves as of the Flock: of the Flock, that they might not want any necessaries as far as the Treasury of the Church cou'd relieve them, and of themselves, that they should not pervert the Money they were intrusted with to their own proper use: for that in fuch cases the indignation of the Holy Ghoft, who avenged himself on such as violated their trust, was justly to be dreaded. The manner of arguing here is exactly the fame with that which the Apostles used in the case of Ananius and Sapphira, to thew that they lied to God, and not to Men: intimating that they represented God's Person, whose wrath and whose punishment they ought to fear. For no less were the Priests themselves to expect the Divine vengeance for profaning the Prietthood, than those that aftronted the Priests were to ex, pect the like, upon the fame account. Thus we fee that Sr. Paul both in his Epistles to Timothy and Titus, requires in a Bishop those very individual vidual Qualifications, which suppose the Fun-Etion to be exactly fuch as we have above describ'd it. He approves that common faying; If any man desires the office of a Bishop, he desires a good work, I Tim. 3. 1. because a wessaoia, or Supervising of good works went along with it, as we have aiready shewn. It follows: A Bi-Shop then must be, &c. 'Tis evident now from this illative particle then that the Qualificat tions which follow, wou'd enable and fit the Bishop for performing those good works, of which he was the Overfeer. That many of them at least look this way, is beyond all dif pute: as for Inffance, that he shou'd be given to hospitality, because being influenced by fo noble and generous a principal, it would the herter dispose him to entertain the Strangers and Necessitous, and relieve them under their pressing extreamities: that he shou'd not be greedy of filthy lucre, nor covetous, nor given to wine, least he shou'd make an: ill use of the publick Money; that he shou'd not be afquanderer of his domestick fortune, least he shou'd embezzle in like manner the fa cred patrimony of the Church; that he should not be a striker, nor a brawler; that he should bave his children in subjection with all gravity, and enforce those that parraked of the publick Tables, to do their duty, rather out of reverenceto his Person, than out of the dread and fear of punishment.

In short this is the reason why the wageas sia, or the ruling of his own House, is compared with the iniminent, or, taking care of the Church, or House of God, 1 Tim. 3. 5. 15. (those that looked after Widows and Orphans, are call'd Curators in the Pandeets, and are the fame with the Greek Exquely ai) as alfo, why the fame Apostle fumming up the Office of a Bishop, calls him the Otnovoquos, or Steward of God, Tit. 1. 7: for Oeconomy chiefly confilts in looking after and managing Accounts. This therefore was the proper business of the Presbyters, while as yet they were invested with no coercive Authority: If belides this, any of them taught, exhorted and advised the People, or the Poor committed to their care; but what is much more, if they refuted growing Herefies in publick, this they did according to the plenty of spiritual Gifts, wherewith they were endowed, and not as they were obliged to it by the common Duty of Presbyters. The Poappaleis, or Scribes, who were likewife reckon'd among the Presbyters, exactly answer'd them in the Fewish Sanedrim. Thus Exra is call'd, A ready Scribe in the Law of Moles, Ezr. 7. 6. A most learned Scribe of the Law of the God of Heaven, Ver. 12. A Scribe pondering the words of the Law, a teacher of the little Ones, Ifa. 33. 18. who is join'd with the Wife, and with the Disputer of this World, 1 Cor. 1. 20. for among the Christians, who borrow'd this Example from the lews, all their Priests were not skill'd in the law. Those who were well versed therein, the

the Holy Scriptures call Nouszei, and vous-Sidaonakoi, Teachers of the Law, and fometimes barely Aidaonahoi, or Teachers. Thus St. Cyprian makes mention of certain Presbyters in the Church, that were Teachers. The fame we may gather from the reward of a Presbyter, who besides his common Duty of ruting, labour'd likewise in the Word, and in Dollrine. Now fuch a one Was worthy of double Honour, viz. to have two shares in the Monthly Dividend, or Mensurna Divisiones, (to speak in the Language of St. Cyprian's Age) one upon the common Score of his Raling, and the other of his Preaching, for the most Excellent Dr. Hammond has prov'd, that the word Honour may be taken in a pecuniary Sense. Indeed the following words evince, that it can't well bear any other Interpretation. 1 Tim. 1. 18. For the Scripture Saith, thou shalt not muzzel the Ox that treadeth out the Corn, and the Labourer is worthy of his hire; where the Apostle acknowledges a Reward due upon the account of the Labour, and a Reward too confertaneous to the Nature of the Labour. Thus the Ox that trod out the Corn upon the Floor, was to partake of that very Corn which was defign'd for other uses; and from thence it follows, that he was to have his there of the facred Money, fince purely by his means, others became partakers of it. The next words are taken out of the Gospel of St. Luke: The Labourer is worthy of his bire, St. Luke 10. 7. And this faying of our Lord was cited, with a defign to show that the Preachers preachers of the Divine Word might receive temporal Things from their Auditors, in lieu of their spiritual Ones. Thus we have exactly described the Office of a Presbyter, such as it was in the Apostolical Age, and shown that it might properly enough be call'd an Episcopat, both upon the account of the Money that was consecrated to God, and that those, who were maintain'd with this Money, were under his Patronage.

Now this Episcopat is different from that, XXXI. which after the time of the Apolles became The name peculiar to the Presbyters of the first Seats, as We as taken have already shown, neither indeed are they for the prinboth referr'd to the same Person of the Tri-ciple of Unity. this may be the reason why he has no proper name, but that of the Holy Ghost, which belongs in common to him, and the other Persons. 'Tis certain we find no mention, either that the Father or Son looked upon themselves as affronted in that pecuniary Case. On the other Hand, the Crime of breaking Unity is refer'd, not to the Bond of Unity, but to the Head, as being the principle of this Unity. Now the name of Head is ple of this Unity. Now the name of Head is ascribed both to the Father and Son, by St.

Paul: And St. John the Apostle, as well at St. Paul tell us, that the Violation of this Unity is to be punish'd by them. But no one mentions the Holy Ghost as interested in this matter. Now this was the latter Epifeo. pat, which folely belonged to the Mewloxdy. degs, after the Church of Ferulalem had loft her Primacy, and which, whether it be. longed to any particular College, either of Presbyters or Apostles, in the flourishing times of the Church of Ferusalem, does not yet appear. I own indeed, that those who communicated not with the Apostles, were believed to have no Pellowship with the Fall ther, or the Son, according to what we find in St. Folm the Apollie, and that that Sentence which alienated a Man from the Head of Unity, manifestly tended to a Dissolution of the fame, But the Head of the Apollolical College, included the very Apollolical College it felf. Neither did the Apostle clearly enough fignifie, in what respect a different Communion from that of the Apoftles was to be esteem'd a different one from that of God, and the Son; that is to fay, whether in respect of the Head it self, or the whole Apostolical College in general. On the other hand he takes it for granted, that those to whom he writ his Epistle knew it so well, that there was no occasion to explain it more fully. Now if this Confequence was to be admitted for the fake of the Head, then in the Primacy of the Church of Ferofalem, the notion of a Head will properly and folely belong to the chief Apostle. And

And if fo, then the name of Biffor might likewise properly belong to him; so then, 'twill be no innovation at all, that after the Destruction of the Church of Ferufalem, the name of Bishop became peculiar to the Theoremades pas there. All that we can fay happen'd new, is that, whereas at first it folely belonged to the Mewloxabedegs of the Church of Ferusalem, and afterwards to him of Epbelus, now it was communicated to those of other Churches. And if so, 'tis less to be wonder'd, that the name of Bishop became proper to the Medloxabedegs, and obtain'd fo Univerfally, in so short a compass of time. The legal Devolution of the name was of it felf fufficient to make it every where received, if it had been proper before, in this fenfe at leaft, to the Mawlona ded pgs of Ferusalem or Epbesus. But there was a particular reason at this juncture, why this new Dignity should be fet out with the most magnificent Titles that might be. As the Apostolat was every where honour'd with the profoundest respect, the Apostles thought it inconfishent with Modelty to profess that this Office was conferr'd upon them by God, and for that reason rather still themselves the Servants of God, than his Apostles, Not but that, if they had had to deal with those, who would not pay that deference to their Character, which was due to it, they would have fet a just value upon that Office, wherewith God was pleased to honour them, and taught others to have the fame efteem for it. And therefore we find, that they themfelves

We are not fo to confound the reciprocal Duties of Life, as to call that Modefty, which acts directly opposite to the publick good, properly to call'd. Nay, to fpeak impartially, 'tis no offence against Modefly, for a Man to claim that respect which is due to him upon the account of his Place. There is no reason why we should boast of a Place, with which we are intrusted, or assume that to our selves, which only belongs to us upon the merit of the Place: Thus this new name of Bifhop was a fort of a fence to the Theolona to egt. It gave those that were subject to them to understand. that whatever Indignities they offer'd to them, were directly levell'd against God, and his Son, and therefore they could not flatter themselv to come off unpunish'd. On the other hand there was no reason why the Thewloxabedeg: should grow haughty, and infolent upon it, fince they could not but expect to have a greater Portion of the divine Vengeance fall upon them, as we thave proved above, if in any thing they acted contrary

Ignatias feems to have had both thefe Things in his Head, when he thus exprest himself concerning Polycarp: To Polycarp, Bishop of the Church of Smyrna, or rather bearing the Office of Bilbop, Eπισποπημένω, under God the Father, and our Lord Fefus Christ: For it exactly agrees with his other reasonings, as we have already observed. So then, when these Πρωθοκάθεσβου first of all took this new name upon them, it was but fitting that all the rights of the Office should rather be afferted. than the modesty of the Officer confulted, for now was an Example of Obedience to be fet up, which was to continue as long as the World lasted.

By this means, therefore was the Unity The Comof particular Churches fo well provided nexion of for, that wholoever embraced a different the wilble Communion from that of the Bishop, he Bishops, was upon that very account to be separated with the from God, and his Christ, since it was in one, the the power of every Bishop to pronounce all reason why Rebels aliens from both. Now in this they were all equally concern'd, because if the Sentence of any one particular Bishop was ratified, then the Sentences pronounced by them all would be ratified alike; but, if the Sentence of any one was call'd in question the Sentences of all the reft must of course be liable to the same Exceptions: And after that rate no one Sentence could have been pronounced, which would have obliged the But if the case whole Episcopal College. had not been fo as I have stated it, the Bishops of particular Churches could neither have admitted any into the Catholick Conmunion, nor excluded them from it. taken away any right beyond the diffrict of his Diocefe, and if after it had been once pronounced, it had been ftill lawfull for other Bishops, either to admit or refuse it in their respective Provinces, as they pleased. But now it is an undoubted truth, that in the next Age, after Ignatius, it was an univerfally received Maxim, that who foever was received by one of the Episcopal College into his Communion, whether by Baptism, or by Imposition of Hands, in case he forfeited the right of Communion granted him by Baptilm by any enormous Offence, the fame Person by virtue of Commendatory Letters from his own Bishop, was received by all the other Bishops in the World. On the other hand, when Marcion was excommunicated by his own Father, who was a Bishop in Pontus, the Church of Rame durst not receive him into Communion, till such time as he had so far satisfied his Father as to revoke his Sentence. 'Tis not fo in fecular Societies, whose rights are merely Temporal, and may be given or taken away apart. not necessary that a Man, who is made free of one City, should consequently enjoy the Privileges of another, or that he who is banift'd out of one Kingdom, should be made uncapable of living any where elfe. This evidently shows what a vast difference there is between the feveral Rights of the Church and State. A Prince has no Right to pretend, that whatever Sentence he palles upon any of his own Subjects, should be confirm'd by all his Brother Princes; and therefore 'tis not reasonable, that he should Usurp the Rights of the Church to himself, which God Almighty never granted to the fecular Magistrate. Now the Foundation on which the Ecclefiastical Right depends is this, that the Bishops, as representing the Person of God and Christ, can consequently confer. and take away those Things, which God and his Christ can confer, or take away: and which no Earthly Prince whatever has a Right to bestow, or take away. Therefore fince this power of the invisible Bishop, is communicated to the visible one, 'tis neces. fary that the Sentences of particular Bishons should be confirm'd by all the rest. For from hence it follows, that when any Man is admitted into the Church by the Bishop. at least in his own district, that he is in like manner admitted by Christ, and when he is ejected out of the Church, that he is likewife to be ejected by Christ; but no one Member of the Episcopal College has a Right to refuse any one his Communion. whom Christ has admitted into his own and acknowledged to be a Member of his Body, by his visible Vicar. Neither on the other hand, has any Bishop a Right to admit one into his Communion, whom Christ in the like manner has pronounced by his vifible Vicar to have no fellowship with him. These reasons plainly demonstrate, that 'tisnot only the interest of every particular Bishop to confirm the Sentences of his other Brethrea thren in their respective Districts, if he has a mind that his own should be confirm'd by them, but that they lye under an indifpenfable necessity to confirm them, fince the Sentences of Christ are to be confirm'd by them all, and the Sentences of particular Bishops, at least in their own respective Difricts, are to be accounted the same with the Sentences of God and Christ. And 'tis but Justice it should be so, since Christ, the invisible Bishop, delegates his Power to the visible Bishop, and invisibly obliges him as much, as if he were prefent upon the place. For by this means the Sentences past by them, are likewife supposed to be past by Christ, and reckon'd of equal Validity, And by this means likewife, the Bishop was only subject to God and Christ, nor to be judged by the College any more, than Christ himself. And this in short was the Opinion of St. Cyprian's Age.

Now the reason of this universal Obligati- XXXIII. on ariseth from hence, that there was only What Igone Church in the whole World, one Alear, meant by one Bishop, and one Episcopat, a portion the Cathowhereof was intirely posses'd by every Bishop lickChurch in particular, as St. Cyprian, de Unit. Eccl. expresses himself; so that whatever was done by any one particular Bishop, was imputed to the whole Episcopal College, and upon that account was to be consirm'd by it, as if it had been Decreed by the unanimous Sussesses of all. This is call'd the Catholick Church by Ignatius, whose words are as following in his Epistle to the Smyrneans; Wherefoever

the Bishop appears, there let the Multitude be after the same manner as where Christ is, there is the Catholick Church, c. 8. This is the first and most ancient mention of this word, the' I don't in the least doubt, but that it comes from a much higher Original. Now, be cause the discussing of this point fully, is of the last importance in Theology, especially that Branch of it which relates to Antiquity. I hope I shall undertake a task not unaccep. table to the Lovers thereof, if I endeavour to explain this Affair with a little more accuracy than hitherto it has been done; I mean by the Assistance of God, who sometime vouchfafes to reveal those Things to the leaf. which had escaped the Penetration of the mol learned. We have nothing to do here with the common Signification of the word Cathe lick, whereby is meant the confent of those Churches at least, that were founded by the Apostles, Hegesippus had not as yet discover'd their consent, when Ignatius Writ this; neither did any Herefies spring up in Hadrian's time, to give any one an opportunity of difcovering this Confent. Nay, it could not mean the universal Consent of all Churches, which passes for the Touch-stone of truth in the Opinion of Vincentius Lirinenfis. I will not now enquire farther into the merit of of that Argument, at prefent 'tis fufficient for me to remark, that this Signification has nothing to do with Ignatius's meaning of the word Catholick, which does not require the confent of many Churches, but much less that of all in general. But least of all has the meaning meaning of Cardinal Perron any thing to de here, who supposes it owing to the Cathelicifm of one particular Church, that the rest were call'd Catholick. This Hypothesis is diametrically opposite to the Ignatian parity of all Chutches. And laftly, that Signification which the Latitudinarians have bestow'd upon it, who make it comprehend all manner of Communions, at least Schismatical, within the compass of the Catholick Church, wherein Salvation is to be had, as it is the most contrary that may be to the whole Discipline of the Primitive Church, so it was far from being own'd, or any thing like it in that Age. Our Ignatius then calls the invisible and original Church, by the name of the Catholick one, under Christ the original and invisible Bishop, in which sense 'tis oppofite to the secondary and visible Bishop, and the People congregated under him; and this very properly according to the Language, and manner of reasoning of that Age. The Grees call'd the Affemblies, or publick Conventions of Cities by the name of 'Exxluoiai, confequently the Assemblies of the Heavenly ferusalem, are to be accounted original Churches; namely, under the direction and Presidentship of the hopes, whom we have already proved to be the original Bishop. I will erit of Philo himself, who was a Contemporary of ent for the Apostles, acknowledges that there's a as no-City invested with Metropolitical Authority of the in the hoyos; fo that we can't doubt, but ire the that he means the same Heavenly Ferusalem, to which all must fly, that are guilty of any ch les as the piacular eaning piacular Crime. For inhis Book de Profugis, he thus expresses himself: This is therefore the ancientest, the strongest, and the best Metropolis. not only a City, but the Divine Loyos or Word. to whom 'twill be the fureft way to fly, the foonest we can. From hence we come to understand what is the meaning of that Expression to be in Christ, according to the Phraseology of the New Testament, viz. the very same with what Philo means to be in the Loyos, the very same as to be a Citizen of the Hea. venly ferusalem, and to be a partaker of its Privileges. In like manner, the Author of the Epittle to the Hebrews owns both a City and Church above: his words, relating to this purpose, deserve our Observation: Heb. c. 12. V. 22, 23, 24. But ye are come into Mount Sion, and unto the City of the living God, the Heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of Angels. To the general Assembly and Church of the first born, which are written in Heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the Spirits of just Men made perfect; and to Fesus the Mediator of the New Covenant, and to the Blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better Things than that of Abel. In this place the Apolle feems to describe the Proselytism of the new Peculium, as that word denotes a going over to the worship of the true God, and to God's own People, the Ifraelites. Now the Ancients most frequently worshipped upon Mountains, and therefore the Prophet describing the wonderful Success of God's Worship, tells us, That the Mountain of the Lord shall be La 2. 2. upon the Top of the Mountains, meaning Sion the Moun-

Mountain of the true Peculium, which was within the City of Ferusalem, as 'twas oppofed to Mount Sinai, where the Mosaical Law was given, Situate in Arabia, the Seat of the race of Ishmael, which had no right to the Promises made to Abraham, Gal. 4. 24, 25. And as for the City, whose freedom they had obtain'd by this new Profestism, he means the Heavenly Ferafalem, the City of the living God; for by that name the Writers of the Old Testament use to distinguish the true God from Idols; and withal 'tis intimated that that Life, which the Heirs of the old Peculium expected only to be Temporary, and those of the new to be Everlasting, was to be found in the Heavenly Ferusalem, and not in the Terrestrial. After this he describes the Fellow-Citizens, into whose Society they were admitted by virtue of this new Profelytism: And first of all innumerable Companies of Angels, rather mentioned by Daniel, than Enoch; on purpose to oppose them to that lester number of Angels, by whose Ministry the Mosaical Law was promulgated, Acts 7. 28. Heb. 2. 2. After these he mentions, the first-born written in Heaven, alluding to that Custom, whereby every one used to be written, or taxed into bis own City, St. Luke 2. 3. that is to fay, in their Registers, or Books of Record. By the firstborn, he means the Patriarchs, not only upon the score of their Antiquity, and the double Portion they might claim in the Inheritance of the Peculium; but likewise for their Sanctity, because the first-born were consecrated to God. He adds, the Spirits of just Man made made perfect, by which I suppose he mean (a) Heb. the Martyrs, for the fame (a) Author elfe. where makes mention of fuch, as were made 2. 10. perfect by their Sufferings; and under the name of the Just, the Martyrs are often to be understood in the (b) Canonical Writings of the New Testament; and the (1) Mat. 23. Spirits of the just, are to be taken in the fame Song of the sence. So then he meant the original Assemthree Chil- bly and Church of the Angels, the Patriarch and Marryrs, and unless I am millaken, he dren, had in his head the annual Fealls of the Pall over, the Pentecoft, and the Tabernacles, and those great Assemblies, or holy Meetings, that tifed to be celebrated upon those stated Festivals: Intimating that these original and celestial Festivals were always grateful and acceptable to God, (which the Hellenifts always affirm'd of the Originals) but that the Festivals celebrated here upon Earth, were acceptable to him upon no other fcore, than as they were united with the Original; namely, by that mystical Union which passes between the Originals, and the Copies. Now this is the first notion of an inninia as'tis taken for a Conventus, or an Affembly, and from hence proceeds the fecond, whereby it means the People flocking together in thefe Assemblies. This therefore is the very fame Church, which Ignatius call'd Catholic, and which has the fame Prefidents, God Almighty, and his Son. The aforesaid Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, calls God the Judge of all; alluding to those Kejrau or Judge

This Keitns wavrwv, or Judge of all, fignified the chief Judge of a City, and that of a Metropolitical City too, to which Appeals were brought from the other Cities. which in respect of the other Jewish Cities, we have prov'd to be true of the terrestrial Ferusalem. But by the word City, we are here to mean not the Metropolis of the Jewish Cities only, but of all others, for fuch was this Celestial City reckon'd. Neither is the Father call'd Keitns wanton, in respect of Cities only, but of the Son likewife: For the Father gave Judgment to the Son, Who when be has put all Enemies under his Feet, then shall be also himself be subject to the Father, I Cor. 15. 28. for thus God the Father, as he is opposed to the Son, is call'd o on wasiv, i.e. all in all, by the Hellenists. Now not only St. Paul, but St. Fohn, and our holy Martyr Ignatius join the Son, the Mediator of the New Testament, with the Father in this Præfecture of the Celestial Church; and does not the mention of the sprinkling of Blood teach us, that the Mediator in this place is to be looked upon as the Head and Principle of the Mystical Unity? The Apostle had before his Eyes the sprinkling of the Propitiatory by the high Priest, upon the yearly Festival of Propitiation: And the holy Writers ascribe (a) flegoaywyn, i. e. access, (a) Rom. which exactly answers the word wegonhuois, 5. 2. Nay the abovemention'd Au-Epitel. 2. to the Son. thor of the Epistle to the Hebrews, attributes 12. our entrance into the Holiest of Holies to the Blood of our Lord, Heb. 10.19, 20, 22. He likewise shows that the Blood of our Lord is in this respect to be preferr'd to that of Abel. because it did not cry for revenge upon those that shed it, (which the Blood of Abel did) but even procured admission for them into the heavenly Places, if they repented fincerely. But after all, why did Ignatius bestow the name of Catholic upon that which we call the Church Triumphant? I answer, agreeably enough to the Platonic Language of the Hellenists, which the Writers of the New Testament so often imitate, as we have shown. For the Platonists call'd the Celestial Originals. τα καθόλε, as Aristotle knew well enough when he refused his Master's Opinion, who afferted Univerfals separately existing from Singulars. No matter, whether this Disciple of Plato represented his Opinion fairly or not: this is evident, that Plato us'd to talk after that manner, and call'd the Originals of Things, Пардо'егунава Каволика. This there fore was the primary Signification of the Catholic Church.

XXXIV. In the secondary Signification of the word, parParticular ticular Churches may be likewise call'd Catholic,

For the Orthodox Churches were believed to differ from Heretical and Schifmatic Communions in this particular, that the former grew up into one Body with the Celeftial and Original Church, and confequently conferr'd a right towards obtaining the rewards of the Original Church, which cannot be hoped for in Conventicles, differing from the OrthodoxChurch. Now all the Argumentation of the New Testament proceeded thus, a priori, viz. that all the benefits of Communion were Spiritual, and that none but God could dispose But why did we expect that God would give them? By vertue of the Covenant he enter'd into with the Patriarchs, and the Promises made to them, and their Seed. This is the reason why those heavenly Rewards are fet forth by Abraham's Bosom, and fitting down to heavenly Banquers with Abraham, Isaac and Facob; that their Posterity therefore had no Pretentions to hope for them, unless they could prove themselves descended from that Seed, to which the Promises made to the Patriarchs were due, by virtue of the Covenant enter'd into with them. If they could prove this, then they afterwards grew up into one Body with the Patriarchs, and confequently posses'd all Rights and Privileges in common with them. Possession of the celestial Rewards. Upon this account the Fews allow'd the Cuthean Samaritans no portion in these heavenly Rewards. because the latter belonged to the Patriarchs's Seed in no fense whatever. And by the same reason the Christians proved that the Fewswere to be excluded out of the Peculium, because that Seed, which had a right to the Promifes made to the Patriarchs, was not of the Flesh. but of Faith. From thence they concluded that those who only boasted of the Flesh, and not of the Faith, were aliens to that Seed of the Patriarchs to which the Promifes were made: neither were those to be accounted their Ancestors, who now enjoy'd the Promiles made to them, fo as they could make up one Body with them, and receive the like Rewards: For upon this Unity of the Body depended all that fellowship, which should make them in like manner followers, or partakers of the fame hope. They moreover urged that the Seed, in which all Nations were to be bleffed, was Christ himself, Gal. 3. 16. who was descended from the very Flesh of the Patriarchs in like manner as the rest. From hence it follow'd, that those, who did not own Christ, upon that very account did not belong to the Seed, to which the Promifes were made; and consequently had no fellowthip with those that had obtain'd the inheritance of the Promises in the heavenly Ferula-On the other hand, they afferted upon all these accounts the fellowship of the new Peculium, and the Seed of the Patriarchs by faith, with the Patriarchs then actually polfelling fessing their inheritance in Heaven. this manner are all the reasonings of the New Testament in this case to be understood, for it supposes that whatever the Members of one. and the same Body posses'd in Heaven, was like wife to be posses'd by the rest. The Apofile looks upon this Possession as an earnest of see Herthat which was hereafter to belong to the Lib. 1. whole Body, and takes those very Persons for Vis. 3. N. first-fruits, from whom the Consecration of the 5. and Lib. whole Harvest was supposed to proceed, 1 Cor. 3. Sim. 9. 15. 20. Thus likewise he places a spiritual 16. Building upon the Foundation of the Apostles Fesus Christ himself being the and Prophets, chief Corner-Stone, Eph. 2.20. By the Prophets he understands the Patriarchs, and shows that the old fellowship was with the Patriarchs, and the new one with the Apostles as the Foundations of the Building; but in both places with Christ as the Corner-Stone, who join'd them both together, in whom all the Building fitly framed together, would grow into a holy Temple in the Lord. For to this superstructure built upon these Foundations, the Apostle ascribes it, that they were no more Strangers and Foreigners, but Fellow-Cirizens with the Saints, and of the Houshold of God. From hence we gather that that Church has a fellowship with the Original one, which has a fellowship with the Apostles; after the same manner as those Persons had a fellowship with the Patriarchs, tho' they lived leveral Ages after them, that were descended from their Seed. Thus we see the Apostolical Original Church in Heaven, is that by which all the Churches upon Earth M 3 are to be tried: and therefore the first Apostolical Church, in the same primary Signification of the word, may be truly and properly filed Catholic, and even particular Churches at this time, if they will maintain the name of Catholic, and prove themselves to be built up. on the Foundations of the Apostles; I mean, if they preserve the Doctrine of the Apostles pure and incorrupt. Tertullian in his Book de Prafer, c. 20. favours this Opinion. Into fo many, and so great Churches, is that one first Church founded by the Apostles branched, from which all the rest came: Thus all of them are first, and all of them Apostolical, while all of them approve one Unity. And from this passage, unless I am mistaken, I can find out a better reason than that which I gave before, why the last Canonical Epistles are call'd Catholic; for upon this very account did they deferve that name, according to the reasonings of that Age, because they were Apostolical. For as the Church of the Apofiles had therefore the name of Catholic given it, because it was the Original Church; so likewise the Writings of the Apostles were properly call'd Catholic, because they were the Writings of the original and heavenly Church. After the fame manner, a very ancient Author, and one who, unless I am mistaken, lived in this Age, when the Catholic Epistles were so call'd, I mean the Author of the Testaments of the Patriarchs, lately published in Greek by the learned Mr. Grabe, calls the Canonical Writings of the Old Tellament, the Tables of the Heavens, and the Prophesie of Heaven. less perhaps he is the same Person with the Author of the Prayer of Joseph, cited by Origen, and who feems to be the fame that writ the Testaments of the three first Patriarchs, (for the abovemention'd Prayer of Joseph, might very well be introduced into the Testament of Facob) does likewise mention II anas spavav. or the Tables of the Heavens. Certain it is. that the Patriarchs gather those Things that are to be found in those celestial Books, no where elfe, but out of the Scriptures, altho' the Author thought it an Indecorum, should quote the words of that they those that were younger than themselves. We read in Deuteronomy 33. 2. of the fiery Law, which pursuant to the Mystical Reasonings of the Apostolical Age, is to be refer'd to the Original Law. Nay, the Rabbies themselves own that the Law is ancienter than the World, which can only be affirm'd of the Original Law. Therefore 'tisplain, their meaning is, that all Churches are to be call'd Catholic, as far as they agree with the Original Church, which strictly and properly is Catholic; and thus all humane Writings are to be examin'd and tried by those of the Apostles, and are no farther to be call'd Catholie, than they agree with them. Originals are, as it were, fo many Touchstones, by which the Copies are to be tried, if they pretend to assume those Titles, that truly and properly belong only to the Originals. But then, you'll fay, St. Paul's Epistles ought for the same reason to be call'd Catholick, and so ought the Gospels, at least those that were written by Apostles: 'Tis true, if we consider the Signification of the word they ought. but the reason why they were not call'd fo, I suppose to be this, because they were either published by the Apostles themselves, when alive, or else were stamped by their approbation. For the Apostles when alive might be faid in some measure to constitute an Original Church, but not a heavenly one. to which properly belongs the name of Ca-Now those Epistles we call Catholic, tholic. being collected into one Volume, began to be call'd fo, when neither the Apostles were longer conversant upon Earth, nor the Writers of those Epistles, nor others that could confirm the veracity of them by their Testimony. This is the reason, doubts arose concerning the greater part of those which were not published to the World, till a confiderable time after the death of the Apostles. Upon this account Eusebius remarks, who of the Ancients first mentions these Epistles: Now as for the first Epistles of St. Peter, and St. John, he traces Witnesses that lived in the very next Age to the Apostles, tho' they were not Contemporaries with them, but however Witnesses proper enough to make the genuineness of them pass indisputed. Rusebius has observed, that the Witnesses of the other Epistles are of a younger date. So then we conclude, the name of Catholic to be challenged from a confent with the Apostles, at least in Doctrine. Nor is that all but likewise 'tis necessary that they be Members of the same Body, if they would be Members of the same City. Those Perfons therefore make up one Body with the Apostles, who preserve inviolate that fort of Government, which the Apostles left them by hereditary Succession, and not those that have destroy'd the Constitution, and from a Monarchy turn'd it into an Aristocracy. But we complain, that the fellowship with the Original Church is broke off upon another account; for the Father, and as being the principles of mythe Son, flical Unity, preside over the heavenly Church, and confequently none but those Churches keep up a fellowship with the Original, which in Conformity to that can how those principles of Unity, by which the Father and Son may be represented; which visible principles of Unity, the Aristocratical Model has rejected, and therefore may be faid to have rejected the Father, and the Son, as the principles of Unity. Churches confequently are aliens to Father and Son, and also to that Original Church, which is united under them both. And upon this foot, 'cis certain they proceeded all along in their mystical Reasonings, after the manner of that Age. then then we find, that those Churches could not assume the name of Catholic, which had cast off all Fellowship with the Original Church, from whence particular Churches derived that name. 'Tis true, God Almighty, if he had been fo pleafed, could have kept up a fellowship or mystical Unity between the Original Church, and other vifible Churches, in any manner of Govern. ment, whether Monarchical or not; but all this intirely depends upon his own free Will and Pleafure. He may, and that with the greatest Justice, in benefits that we are only to expect from his free Will, oblige us firictly to observe those means, which in like manner depend upon his free Will. Thus he would not cure Naaman of his Leprofe. by any other Water than that of the River Fordan, fo that the Syrian must have gone without a cure, if he would have tried none but his own Country Rivers. Now this Obligation, as well as Sanction, is molt justly required in means, altho' they are wholly Arbitrary, and he that won't make use of the means prescribed him, has no pretence to expect the Benefits that are annexed to them. There is no Law without a Mula or Penalty to be inflicted on those that Transgress it, and this Penalty is inseparably join'd to the Sanction, least the disobedient should reap the same Privileges with such as obey the Letter of the Law. Nay, God is so far from conniving at these incroachments upon his Authority, that we always find him a most severe Exafter of the most inconsiderable Ceremonies, in Things relating to his Worship. At least there is no colour or pretence, why God should ratifie their Inventions in Heaven, who have annulled his Constitutions upon Earth: And this fingle Confideration is fufficient to prove, that they have no Fellowship with the heavenly Catholic Church, and therefore are not to be accounted Catholic.

And now from this Fellowship of the XXXV. Invisible and Visible Churches, we are a- st. Cyprible to account for a certain passage in St. an's words Cyprian, where he Discourses about the U-are exnity of the Church, and where he does plain'd, connot advance any Notions particular to Church, one cerning one himself, but what are exactly agreeable to Bishop, one the aforefaid Hellenistical Reasonings, which Episcopat, were then univerfally received. In the first a portion whereof was place, there will be but one Church of all possess in Christians, tho never so remote, and di-full by evefant from one another, for the Church is ry Bishop. 2 Congregation of People, who have a right to public Assemblies, and all other Privileges belonging to a City. And therefore in this fense there cannot be above one Church in a City. 'Tis true indeed, that the freedom of one City may belong to many more, as we find the Roman Colonies were free of Rome, from whence they Ori. ginally came. Thus St. Paul, who was born at Tarfus, was upon that very account a Citizen of Rome. At last Caracalla though fit to make all the Subjects of the Roman Empire, as far as it extended, free of the City of Rome, for which reason Censorinus C. 16. calls Rome, the common Country of all Mankind: Upon which place it may nor be amiss for the Reader to consult Lindenbrogius's Notes. By this means it came to pals, that whoever was admitted into any one City belonging to the Roman Empire he was (ipso facto) made a Citizen of Rome. After the same manner Affairs were order'd in the Christian Church. All Churches, tho' far distant from each other, admitted some, as they faw fitting, into the heavenly City of Ferusalem, and consequently into the Original Church of that City, and excluded others out of it. Had it not been fo, the Communion of one Church had been confined within the limits of its own respective district, and could not have confer'd any right to the Communion of all other Churches, that were upon the fame Neither indeed could the level with it. censure of one particular Church hinder any of its Members subject to it, who had been expelled its Communion, from being received by other Churches. mit Persons into the Original Church, which is the same with the Catholic, thence came they to acquire a right of admitting them into all the other Churches of the World, hecause none of them could refuse him, whom the Original and Catholic Church in Heaven had already acknowledged; and furely not him, whom Christ, the invisible Bishop, had admitted by his visible Vicar upon Earth. On the other hand, fince every particular Church had a right to expel out of the Original and Catholic Church, from thence it followed, that, no other Churches, or visible Vicars of Christ could receive those whom Christ himself, by the visible Vicar of the place, to which they belonged, had already pronounced Aliens to himseif, and his Catholic Church in Heaven. So then, fince the Rights of all these Churches were one, and the faine, and not at all differing from those of the Celestial Church, they could not but make up one Church among them, being incorporated as they were, upon one Head, to whom they ow'd, that themselves could be call'd Churches: For the Platonists, as they ascribed Unity, so likewise they attributed Truth to these Originals: And indeed St. John the Apostle reckons Truth among the Benefits of the Mystical and Original Communion. Therefore according to the opinion of the Hellenists, those which we call Churches here upon Earth, were no more to be accounted various Churches, than several Parbelii

Parbelii of one, and the same Sun are to be call'd different Suns. By this Example the Platonists used to explain, how there might be various Copies, and refemblances of the fame individual Original. 'Tis certain that all Churches fo far borrow'd their solware from the Original Church, that those which are not united with it, have forfeited all their Rights, and confequently don't deferve the name of Churches, as the word fignifies a Society, invested with spiritual Privileges. Therefore the very fame reason, which makes all Churches that preferve a Fellowship with that above, but one Church, will likewise prove that all Bishops are but one Bishop in Effect, and that one only Episcopat is shared among them: For the invisible Bishop alone does all in all. He admitted into the Original Church, and he excluded out of it, he confer'd all the Benefits of the Mystical Communion, and he took them away. All that the visible Bishops had to do, was to supply the place every one in his own district, of the invisible Bishop, which was committed to his care, and in his name to pronounce fuch Sentences upon Earth, as should be afterwards confirmed by him in Heaven: And therefore, fince they transacted all in Christ's Name, and not in their own, it follows of course, that all of them represented Christ's one Person: After the fame manner, as if a Man Thould have Bufiness in several Courts, and in each of these Courts should employ several Counfellors sellors to plead in his own Name, all these Counfellors, tho never fo many, make up but one Person in the Eye of the Law, namely of the party who intrusted them to manage his Affairs, for he, and only he must come off a winner or a loser in all these Actions, the Verdicts affecting only himself, for the Counsellors get nothing for themselves, but for the Person that set them at work. We have already proved, that the name of Bishop belongs properly to God, and not to Man, and confequently cannot otherwise be applied to Man, than as that Man reprefents the Perion of God. Therefore he is the only and true Bishop, in whose proper Name the Episcopat is discharged, and not he, who only executes another's Office committed to his care. Upon this account, 'tis impossible that there should be above one Episcopat in the World, fince there is only one, who can truly and properly be call'd a Bishop. But perhaps it will look more like a Paradox, what St. (a) Cyprian (a) St. has advanced concerning this one Episco-Cypr. de pat, viz. That part of it is possess'd in full by Unit. Ecevery particular Bishop, and yet as contradictory as it looks, 'tis infallibly true. one Episcopat is wholly posses'd by every Bishop, for every particular Bishop can do as much, as all the Bishops in the World with their united Suffrages; he can admit a Man into the Communion of all the rest, and turn him out of the same, and the unitedSuffrages of them all, can do no more than this.

And yet every particular Bishop prefides only over a part of the universal Flock. and gives and takes away all the Benefits of Mystical Communion, not from all, but only from his own part of the universal Flock, in his own respective District. Thus there's no Contradiction in this passage, tho it looks fo gross at first fight.

The chief Privilege therefore, which accame about crued to every Πρωτοκάθεσ egs in particular after the Destruction of the Church of 76. rusalem, was this, that he was now in the made up a fame station which only belonged to the Bishop of Ferusalem before, viz, that every Billiop in his own respective District, was the principle of Unity; now from hence it followed, that the whole Right either of admitting to, or refusing Communion was lodged in the hands of the Howlona Hed pos. and that upon the account of his new Epif. copal Character. 'Tis manifest from the constant and universal Practice of those Times, that the People who lived at the Juncture, when this new Right devolved upon them, believed fo: For as none but Bishops gave Communicatory Letters, so they accepted them from none but those of the fame Dignity, provided the Episcopal See were full; and were there nothing elfe to prove it, this alone were proof fufficient, that the whole power of giving or denying Communion belonged intirely to the Bishops. This is the reason why none, but they had a place in Councils, at least from that that Epoch we have laid down, viz. The Destruction of the Church of Ferusalem. I must own that the Advice of the Presbyters has been sometimes listen'd to, and especially in Diocelan Councils, but we never read of Decretory Sentences, of Final Determinations, and Sanctions of Canons made by any but Bishops. From hence it appears that the Bishops were invested with so eminent a Power in their own Dioceses, that they could determine them of their concuring Suffra-We find that St. Cyprian, when his Presbyters without confulting him in the matter, had admitted fome that had lapfed to Communion, looked upon it as an Indignity offer'd to his own Episcopal Function, and not the Presbyters; which he would never have done if he had only posses'd the right of Communion in confort with the whole Presbytery. For this reason he calls all the Bishops his Collegues, but not the Presbyters; nay by that very name of Collegues he difinguishes them from the Presbyters: Upon no other occasion to be fure, but that some Rights belonged in common to all Bishops, to which the Presbyters had no Pretentions. Thus the Romans used to call the Confuls, Prators and Tribumes, Collegues, because as they had the fame Name, fo they had the ame Power. And therefore that the Bishops made up a peculiar College among themselves, 'tis wholly owing to this, that they posses'd certain Rights peculiar to themfelves. Upon this Score St. Cyprian acknow-

In Concil. ledges no Bishop of Bishops, but roundly asferts, that every Bishop was to give an account of his Actions only to God and his Christ, and that as he himself ought not to censure the Actions of another Bishop, so another Bishop ought not to censure bis. He maintains that all Bishops are made by God and his Christ, and not by the Presbytery, whatever that Fabulous Trifler Eutychius affirms to the contrary, and that whoever prefumes to disobey their Orders, must expect to be severely punish'd by God. He never talks thus of Presbyters, or of the whole Presbytery in general This shews the Monarchy of the Bishops to have been most Absolute, at least according to the receiv'd Doctrine of that Age wherein St. Cyprian lived, nay even that when Ignating flourished; for we find both those Ages a. gree in this. For this reason the Roman Presbyters confess that their own Power is clipt in a Sede vacante, when they have no Bishop empower'd to transact Affairs for For this reason too St. Cyprian in his Retirement enjoins his Presbyters for many particular things, which had not in the least been necessary, if the Rights of the Presbyters in that Age had been own'd to be so great, as the Presbyterians pretend. Neither was this all, but he joins to them those Bishops that lived nearest to his Flock, if any thing were to be done with greater Authority and Solemnity. Now I would willingly be informed why he did this, if he did not look upon the Authority of a Bishop

Bishop to be greater, even without his own Diocese, than that of the whole Presbytery in their proper place? The abovementon'd Father uses the same Conduct in the case of his own Schismatics, when they were to be ejected from Communion; for in this Age we don't find one approved Instance of Communion given or refused, without the Bishops consent, by the Presbyters, who had not fo much as the Power to fend Communicatory Letters to the Neighbouring Bishops: Nay, their Censures would have been Null and Void if they had not been confirm'd by the Neighbouring Bishops.' Tis a plain case that those Writers who flourished when the Primacy of the Church of Ferufalem was on Foot, Ipoke after another rate of the Presbyteries. St. Paul commands the Hysperon to be Honoured, and St, Clemens, the Fellow-labourer of that Apostle, frequently inculcates the Reverence that is due to the Presbyters. But neither of them makes the least mention of the Mealloxabedegs, or any one fingle Presbyter. Now 'tis quite otherwise with St. Cyprian. He never talks of any luch thing as Rebels to the Presbyters, nay not to the Presbytery in general, but only to the Bishop then being. He makes Christ the Avenger of the Episcopat, and not of the Presbyters; as if the Rights of the Church of Ferusalem had not devolved upon the other Presbyters, but only upon the Hewlexabeolegs, and the rest continued in their old Station, that is to fay, invested with no Co-I might add feveral things ercive Power. relating to this purpole, were there any neceffity for it, but the most Ingenious Author of an English Treatise, Intituled, A Discourse concerning the Principles of St. Cyprian's Age, has faved me that trouble.

So then 'tis evident that matters went thus. And justly at least de facto, and that they ought to be the Reason- to de jure, is plain from the Reasonings and ings of that Arguments of those times, which we have proved to be Solid and Satisfactory; for certainly the Principle of Unity, which can only belong to one fingle Person, could never belong to the Bishop in Partnership with the Presbytery. Now if that properly was annexed to the Episcopat, the right of Communion likewise solely belonged to that. I call that the Principle of Unity, without which is impossible for Unity to be maintain'd. when once loft, whatever other things we may suppose it actually possess'd of. But the abovemention'd Reasonings have fully shown that this belongs to the Bishop. For the mystic and visible Symbols are so inseparably join'd together, that whoever is destitute of the Symbol, cannot partake of the thing fignified by the Symbol. Now Christ, who is likewise the invisible Bishop, is the Principle of mystic Unity, and consequently we can have no other Symbol of him than the visible Bishop. Thus he who is united to the Bishop is in like manner united to Christ, and he that follows any other Communion than that of the Bishop, upon that very account, is excluded the Communion of Christ, altho' he should Communicate with the whole Presbytery.

bytery. But he that does not Communic are with Christ, cannot be a Member of his Body, neither can he partake of the Holy Ghoft, the Bond of that mystic Unity, neither of any mystic Benefits flowing from the fame, And therefore * Ignatius was undoubtedly in * Ignat. ad the right when he maintain'd, that the Church Trall. c. 3. could not subsist without a Bishop; and St. Cyprian properly defin'd the Church a Flock united to the Bishop. Hence it necessarily follows, that none but the Bishop can admit any one into the Bishops Communion, or exclude from the fame. As certain it is likewife, that none but he can admit any one to the Benefits of the Mystic Communion, or deprive him of them. Thus all the Rewards and Punishments belonging to the Christian Society are intirely lodged in the Hands of the Bishop. From thence it follows of course that the whole Administration and Legislative Authority of the visible Church, as far as it extends to this Society, belongs folely to him, and that without any Competitor. For he only can establish a Law that can confer the Rewards of the Society upon fuch as deferve them, and on the other hand deprive the Disobedient of all those Rights that belong to the Society. But 'tis impossible that any one can be a Competitor of the Bishop, who cannot claim the Rights of the Society to himself, in case he dissents from the Bishop, which even the whole Presbytery cannot presend to do for the aforefaid Reasons; and therefore it does not in the least clash with Realonings of the Apostolical Age, that the very very next Century to it believed that the Bishops made up a peculiar College among themselves; neither did they recede from it. in making God and his Christ the Authors of Bishops, but not of Presbyters, because the former, and not the latter, represented the Person of both as the Principle of Unity; while the Constitution of the Presbyters was fitly enough refer'd to the visible Principle of From thence it naturally Mystic Unity. follow'd, that God the Avenger of the E. piscopal Dignity, but not of the Presbytery, was to be fear'd in case of Contumacy: For as God was the Principle of Unity, and the Supreme Bishop, he would concern himself in all Affronts offer'd to him, whom he entrusted to supply his place upon Earth, and who represented the Person of God upon the account of his being the fole visible Bishop. It properly belonged to God to protect and maintain the Supreme Power, which had none but himself to appeal to, and not a Subordinate Power which was placed under the Patronage of another. Thus we find every thing exactly agrees with the abovemention'd Reafonings, which we have al-

XXXVIII ready proved to have been used in the A-The afore-postolical Age.

Said Form And indeed if we calmly and diligently of Church consider it, there is nothing in this Constiment was tution of Ecclesiastical Government to be most useful found fault with. On the other hand we for uniting have all imaginable reason to admire the Di-Churches vine Prudence of it, so well adapted in every with one point, for the better ordering of that Society. another.

The Christians at that time were one Society made up of many, that were obliged to maintain a firm Concord among themselves, fince they could not expect any support from the Secular Arm. The Bond of their Unity confilted in this, that they hoped for greater Rewards from God, and dreaded greater Punishments from him than from the Civil Magistrate. This made them upon all occasions adhere closer to God than the Civil Magistrate, and tho' the latter used all his efforts to oppose their growth, yet their Unity still continued firm and unshaken. Besides, the two Peculium's, viz. the old and the new one were then to be united together, which was found a very difficult matter to bring about in those first times of the Apostles. Now there was no other way to effect it but that the Christians should Worship the very same God the Father whom the Jews Adored, and that the Jews in Conjunction with the Chrifians should be obliged to embrace the Worship of the Son. For by this means both Parties must necessarily agree in the same objects of Worship. The Christians from hence inforced the necessity of Worshiping the Son, because in our access to God the Introduction of the Son was necessary, and so made a Fellowship with him necessary: Now the Father as well as the Son might be Worshiped in different places; but what hinder'd the Uncircumcifed Christians from frequentting the fame place, and the fame Assemblies with the Jews, was the inveterate Opinion of the latter concerning the Impurity of the N 4 Gentiles,

Gentiles, until they were become Profetytes of Righteoufness. Thus St. John the Apostle in. fers the Benefit of those Assemblies, where none could be admitted that Worship'd the Father without the Son, or indeed both together, unless for the fake of Divine Worship they frequented the same places with the Uncircumcifed. By this means the Partition Wall which heretofore divided the Jews and Gentiles, was quite to be taken down. However the Jews had the Precedence, while the Church of Ferusalem flourished, which was the common Principle of Unity both to Jews and Gentiles, and over which a Jew Prefided. This was the Grafting mention'd by the Holy Apostle. Afterwards it frequently fo fell out, that in many Churches one that was Uncircumcifed was the Principle of Unity, and yet the Jews under pain of Damnation were obliged to own him for the vifible Principle of Unity, if they would own the Father, of whom they boafted fo much: For the Father was the invisible Bishop, and the Uncircumcifed Bishop the Vicar of the Pather, so that whoever refused the Communion of this Bishop, made himself confequently an Alien to the Father. Thus thefe Arguments firmly united the Jews and Gentiles together, fince the Jews willingly fubmitted to an uncircumcifed Principle of Unity, and on the other hand the Gentiles to a Jew, in case it so happen'd. Besides the Duty of Subjects was hereby made manifelt, and every one knew what Party he must adhere to, if to be any Discord should befal the

'Twas impossible that the Bishop the Body. should disagree with himself: now the Communion with the Father and the Son, and all the Mystic Benefits arising from thence were in no danger of being forfeited, while Communion with the Bishop was inviolably preferv'd. In short they could expect no Salvation if they embraced any other Communion than that of the Bishop. Now I desire to know what more efficacious means could possibly be found out to preserve the Unity of the Body Politic, from which none could go aftray, but by their own fault. If they fuffer'd themselves to be guided by reason, no external Violence, how great foever, could separate and disunite them from the Bishop.

Thus the Security and Interest of particu- XXXIX. lar Churches was effectually provided for, As also for that they might not be dissipated by Persecu-Establishtion. Nay the public Welfare of all Churches ing the in general was consulted in that form of Go- different vernment, which we have been describing. Churches While Churches were to be gather'd and with one planted the Primacy of the Church of Ferusa-another. lem was of mighty advantage; for that flow and gradual alteration chiefly contributed to the easier Conversion of the Jews. 'Tis certain that God and Christ were inclined to grant the Priority to the old Peculium, which they had never loft, had it not been for their own inexcusable Stupidity. Divine Goodness would not that any Tews of the old Peculium thould forfeit or unqualifie themselves for the Privileges of the new Peculium; and that as few as was possible might forfeit them, he allow'd them time enough to lay afide their former Prejudices. Neither was he willing that the whole Fewish Nation should at once fall from all these Rights, to which the admission of the Gentiles became more acceptable, fince themselves were united under the Jewish Head of the whole Peculium with the Gentiles. And indeed the farther this Authority of the Apostolical College and of the Bishop of Ferusalem was extended. (while 'twas evident that it was Infallible) fo much the more ferviceable was it to the public Interest of all Churches. Hegelippus informs us that Herefies durst not appear in public, while upon their being Condemn'd by the Sentence of one Church, they had no hopes of being receiv'd afterwards by any Church whatever. It was much fafer for them then to bolt out of their lurking holes, when one Church was not concluded by the Sentence of another, when there were fo many different Opinions in the feveral Independent Churches, and the Authority of those that agreed was become of less Validity, by reason of the scandalous Dissentions of such as disagree'd from each other. Indeed, as for the Propagation of the Faith, the Authority of one fingle Church, which govern'd all the rest, tho' never so remote, was more likely to contribute towards it, fince all would use their joint endeavours to promote the spreading of the Gospel; but then it must be own'd that it was not fo advantageous for bearing the Storms of Persecution. This the Church of Ferusalem found by woful experience, for when

when that was dissipated, the whole Christian Discipline and Government had irretrievably been lost, unless the abovemention'dDevolution of Rights had fo brought matters about, that when one Head was cut off many new ones immediately had fprung up in its room. But by this means it came to pals, that 'twas impossible for Christianity to be wholly supprest, while one Church continued to observe Discipline, at least in its own District. And therefore he that would ruin all Churches must ruin every Church, because particular Perfecutions are only prejudicial to particular Churches. But in this Parity of particular Churches the greatest difficulty lies, how 'tis possible to make them all unanimous in confirming the Sentences of each other. Now unless this be observed, the Discipline of every Church is either in danger of being loft, or at least must be wholly unuseful. But we lye under no necessity to prove the truth of this, which the Primitive Times, of which we are now Discoursing, show to have been unquestionable true as to matter of Fact. For then certainly if ever Discipline and Concord flourished in the highest Perfection. fore let the same Opinions return, which we have proved to be most agreeable to Truth, let them be as firmly and univerfally received, and we have no occasion to doubt but that what seem'd Consentaneous to Reason formerly will find the same Encouragement still. Let a hearty concern for Religion, Piety and Discipline return. Let that Primitive Ardour and Zeal in denying ones felf, that Faith fo ready to undergo the severest Tryals, and that Patience, which fo heroically contemn'd the World, but once return; and we shall foon find those happy times so fruitful in all the bleffed Effects of Discipline and Concord will return again. There are Laws of Nations extant in no public Archives, and intrusted to the care of no Magistrates, in order to purish such as shall transgress them; and yet what by the perspicuity of right reason, upon which they are founded. what by their being fo serviceable to the common Welfare of Mankind, and laftly what by the care of Divine Providence, which is continually watchful for our good, and is dreaded without the Intervention of the Magistrate to back it, we find very few, even in these degenerate dreggy times, so flagrantly daring as to violate them. To conclude, 'tis the common Interest of all Bishops to Confirm and Ratify the Sentences of their Collegues, if they have a mind that their own should in like manner be Ratified. We have shown how rightful and equitable it is, that this Conduct towards one another should be Univerfally observed, and as for the Parity of the Bishops, it will be far from being any Obstruction towards the flourishing of Discipline, either in matters of Faith or of Manners. Nay, in all probability it would exinguish all those unhappy Contentions which too often arise from Secular Pride, from Emulation, and from Envy.

Thus

Thus the Apostles left the Bishops equal to one another, as to the Power they exercised The Impaover their respective Churches; for if the shops, that whole Authority of the Church of Ferula-happen'd lem had devolved upon any one particular afterwards Church, as the Flatterers of the Papal Monar-to be afchy maintain, the name of Bishop had become the Comso peculiar to the Measlonaded pgs of that pasts of the Church, that the Presidents of other Churches Bishops acould not have assumed the Episcopal Title, mong them neither had they been Vicars of the invisible felves. Bishop, as he was the Principle of Unity. Thus no Power had been lodged in other Churches, as before, but it had still belonged to the Itinerary Ministers of this one Church; all which we know to be notoriously false as to matter of Practile. It therefore follows that whatever Imparity among them afterwards obtained, is to be ascribed to the mutual Compacts of Bishops among themselves, and is no father valid than those Compacts could 'Tis a difficult matter to determine how long this Parity continued, after the loss of fo many Primitive Monuments, but I suppose it lasted almost till the times of Constantine: For then we begin to discover Canons of Councils about regulating the private Affairs of Dioceles. Indeed I cannot perswade my felf that the Apostolical Canons, as they are call'd, are ancienter than those Constitutions, whereof they are only a small part, whatever the Learned Beverege may affirm to the contrary. Nay from the Punishments of the Bishops, and the Laws of private Dioceses, I conclude them not to be so much as Primitive. I am of opinion therefore, that those Canons to which the Fathers of the Councils of Nice and Antioch refer, were not written but generally received, like the Laws of Nations, or our Customs here in England, Before this, every Bishop of a Diocese compiled and abrogated Canons for his own respective Diocese, which had nothing of force in other Provinces, neither did he receive Laws from other Diocesans. Thus in the African Church some Bishops received penitent Adulterers into their Communion, and others excluded them from all hopes of Communion for ever, with a Salvo in the mean time to Communion, as likewile to the Commerce of Canonical Letters: For without the Letters of their own Bishop, who had excluded them, his Collegues would not receive these excluded Adulterers; and on the other hand they never refused them, if they brought Communicatory Letters from their own Bi-Nay, that famous Synod of all the Provinces of Proconsular Africk, held under St. Cyprian, would not impose their Opinion upon one diffenting Bishop, if anyfuch in his Diocese would rather allow of the Baptism of Hereticks. In the mean time St. Cyprian, the President of this Synod, promises it shall be so, with a Salvo to Communion. Therefore if any one Bishop of the College was refolved to support one that had been Baptized by a Heretic, his other Collegues were ready to receive him, whom otherwise they would not have admitted as a Subject of their Diocese without new Baptism. fee here that this Synod rather met to confult the public Advantage, than to challenge to it felf a power of imposing any thing by a Majority of Voices. In effect it was such a Power and no other, than what we find in those Conventions, where the Ambassadors of Independant Crown'd Heads meet together to advise about Matters of Importance. The Ambassador of one Prince, that refuses his Affent, is not at all obliged by the Votes of the Major part of the Ambassadors to the St. Cyprian there owns, that evecontrary. ry Bishop is Supreme in his own Diocese, and only accountable to Christ. Therefore he fays it is not Just, nay, he calls it downright Tyranny to compel any one of their Collegues to espouse their Opinion by the Majority of Voices. The reason he gives for it is, that none of the Episcopal College should pretend to fet himself up for a Bishop of Bihops. He uses the same Argument which Tertullian had employ'd before him, when he Ironically jeer'd the Bishop of Rome, who was imposing upon his Collegues, by calling him Pontifex Maximus. Both of them looked upon it as a gross Absurdity for any Man should pretend that he was Superiour to the Bishop, and that very deservedly, if we consider the aforesaid Reasons. For we have proved that the name of Bishop belonged properly to God, as being the Invilible Bishop, and who alone in propriety of Language deserved that Name. He was certainly that Bishop, by whom Ignatius says that Polycarp was supervised. Thus to be a Bishop of

of a Bishop signified the same as to be God. and to judge of a Bishop or his Actions was in effect the same as if one should pretend to judge of God and his Christ. For after this manner does St. Cyprian argue in other places: And indeed I am of the opinion, that the Footsteps of this Parity continued longest in the African Church. For in the African Code of the Fourth Age the Canons of that Church provide, that no Bishop should arrogate any thing to himself, which favoured of Secular Pride; and therefore they derived the Priority in all other Provinces, except the Proconfular Afric, not from the Dignity of the City, but the Seniority of Confecration. So that upon this Foot that was to be reckon'd the first City in the Church, which had the ancientest Bishop; which certainly among equals was the fairest Regulation that could be thought of; for by this means every City, nay the meanest, was in hopes of enjoying this Primacy, without any ambition or undue struggling for it, if their Bishop lived long enough to confer this Honour up-Upon this account they forbad on them. that a Metropolitan should be saluted by any other Name by his Brother Collegues, than that of Bishop of the first See. We read here of no Patriarchs or Arch-bishops, or a. ny other Names of the like nature denoting Government, but those modester Appellations of Primates, Elders and Old Men, which rather denote Precedence of Place and Order, than import any Power over their Collegues.

And 'tis probable, that the fame Moderation was not only observed in Afric, but in other Provinces; 'tis certain it was in Italy and even in the principal City, from whence I suppose some Colonies of Christianity were planted in Afric not long before Terti:llian. He himself, unless I am mistaken, seems to intimate some such matter, and this perhaps was the reason why even the Bishops of Rome hardly received any other Titles from the Africans, but those of Primates and Old Men: in honour, as may be supposed, of their being first Converted by them. 'Tis certain, they must have been converted by Latins, because they spoke no other Language. Now all the Christians of the first Age writ in Greek, even Chemens and Hermas that were Romans did so, and therefore the Africans learnt this modesty from the Romans of the fecond Century. 'Tisan Observation of St Irenaus, that the Predecessors of Victor, from Xystus down to Soter were less affuming than him; for altho' their Sentiments Apud Euconcerning the Celebration of Easter were the seb. Hist. fame with his, yet they never thought of Eccl. 1. 5. breaking off Communion, which he did, c. 26. Gr, with the other Bishops that were of a contrary Opinion, as to the keeping of that Festival. If Irenaus himself presented those Letters in the name of the Gallican Synod to Victor, he was President of that Synod: for he writ in the name of his Brethren in Gallia, over whom he presided, says Eusebius. In the 10th year of Commodus he was formewhat above ninety years old, according to our Computation:

Synod, if it were upon no other account than the Seniority of his Confecration. 'Tis certain, that Eusebius joyns him with Palmas; who, as he confesses, presided over the Bishops of Pontus for the very same reason. and he acknowledges that Irenaus was Bishop of the Churches of Gallia: for he tells Euseb. Hist. us that a Writing was extant in his time of all the Eccl. 1. 5. Bishops of Pontus, over whom Palmas, as bec. 23. Gr. ing the oldest, presided, and of the Churches of Gallia, over whom Irenaus was Bishop. Hitherto then that Form of Metropolitans was received, which rather denoted a priority of Placethan Jurisdiction. Some footsteps we have of this Parity, and those very apparent, down to the Council of Nice. The Major part of Provincial Bishops did not even then make new Bishops. But the Suffrages of all were necessary, if it were posfible for them to be had; this however is certain, that the Metropolitans Vote was necessary; Perhaps the Votes of such as were filent, were supposed not necessary here, tho' not of those that opposed. But 'tis certain, that even at that time the Majority of Voices did not confer a power to determine any thing; and if 'twas the Voices of the Silent which were neglected, there was no injury done even to their Rights. For fuch as were Silent might justly be charged for being fo, unless any one is so foolish as to interpret their Silence to be an argument of Consent.

Indeed vincial if the Presbyters had chosen the High-priest of College. the Jews, there had been some pretence for the fame Right to have devolved upon the Christian Presbyteries, that so they might have been impower'd to fill the first Seat, whenever it became vacant. But we have already shown, that in the Jewish Sanedrim, there was another College Superior to the whole Presbytery, viz. the Archieratical. 'Tis evident, that Some of this Body were duly qualified to perform all the Offices of the High-prieft, in Cases of necessity: As for Inftance, when bodily Indifposition or any legal Pollution hinder'd the High-prieft from officiating in his Function. For in Exigences of this Nature, the Person who supplied his Place might enter into the Sanctum Sanctorum, whether he was a Sagan, or any one elfe belonging to the Archieratical College. But there was not the least trace or footstep of this Superior College in the Christian Prefbyteries; nay not in any other Churches, upon a vacancy of the first Seat, excepting in that of Fernsalem. Presbyteries, we have evidently shewn, that they neither had any fuch Power before, nor acquired a new one after the extinction of the Church of Jerusalem. If therefore there was no fuch Power in the Prefbyteries as to supply the vacant Seat, we must of necessityrepair to the Openra Des ; for this new Right devolving upon them, invested them confequently with a power to provide for the fuccession of this new right, and made whatever was done by them pais as Authentick as if God or his Christ had done it. The Reason is plain, because they represented God and Christ, as the Principles of Unity, but fo did not the Presbyters; and therefore had no share at all in this part of the Epifcopat, which was referr'd to the principle of Unity, nor any Authority to oblige God and Christ, since they could not pretend to pass for visible Bishops; I mean in that signification of the Word, as 'twas properly applied to the visible Principle of Unity. Now not only St. Cyprian, but Ignatius likewife, ascribes the Institution of visible Bilhops to God and Christ; and 'tis a plain case that they were elected by their Brother Collegues, at least in St. Cyprian's time. * Socrates in-Eccl. Hift. forms us, that Novatian was advanced by imposition of Hands to the Episcopat, by fome Bilhops of the fame Opinion with himself; and † Cornelius's Epistle to Fabius of Antioch more particularly teaches us, that three Bishops lay'd their Hands upon him.

to be met with in any genuin and authentic Monuments; however this hinders not but that it might have been fo from the begining. Nay, St. Cyprian attributes it to Divine Tradition and Apostolical Observation, that for the due celebrating of Ordinations the Bishops of the next Province met before that Congregation phich wanted one to prefide over them, and chose them a Bishop. Ep. LXVII. Edit. Oxon. So then if the new Bithops were not created by the Presbyteries, but by the Neighbouring Provinces, we can affign no Reason why it should not belong to the whole College in general, but especially of that Province. We have demonstrated that they were equal to one another, and confequently that none were to be excluded. Befides they maintain'd a fair Correspondence among themselves by their Communicatory Letters, which they mutually fent and received. Thus it was the comon Interest of all these Bishops to chuse a fit and proper Collegue, by whom the In case of aforefaid Commerce might be preferved. Nei- Sacrince, ther can it be pretended that here was any fu-Schilm, no pervising of the Bishop in this designation of the need of Person, when he was first consecrated Bishop, any Depobecause he was no Bishop till then.

It was a more difficult Question to resolve, first times whether after this Person was now Bishop, and no sentence for some irregularity to be divested of the patt against Episcopat, his Collegues had any Authority Bishops, to depose him, fince they durst not presume that to be Bishops of those that were truly Bi- to argue a thops. Now it was not in the least doubted furerior but that his Collegues might at least not own Power over him for a Brother Collegue, who by his Crimes had divefted himself of the Episcopal Dignity. But then it was necessary they should be Crimes of so black a Nature, as not only to make him deferve deprivation. but which, ipfo facto, disabled and utterly uncapacitated him for performing the Function of a Bishop. For in this Case the Question was not concerning a Bishop, but one that had been fo formerly, but now was not. All that was here to be done, was only to inquire into the matter of Fact. As foon as that was made appear, the Delinquent had no Episcopal Power to be deprived of, neither was there any need of a Judge formally to depose him, but only to fill his Seat which was vacant. Such a Crime as this was it to Sacrifice to Idols, for there is no Communion between Christ and the Devil. 1 Cor. 10. 21. and confequently he that is a partaker of the Devil's Table, cannot be a partaker of the Lord's, but much less he that is the Head of all the Communicants, and the Principle of Unity. For this Reason, even in St. Cyprian's Age, there was not the least dispute about substituting of Successors into the places of Martialis and Bafilides, who had polluted themselves with the above mention'd Crime. And therefore the foolish Impostor of the Council of Sinnessa committed a gross mistake in making his Bishops to doubt whether they should pass Sentence upon Marcellinus who had polluted himself by Offering Sacrifice, because he was a Bishop of the First See. of the Cyprianic Age never hefitated about the point, for they made no Bishop's subject to another. Such a Crime too was Herely; for the chief end of the Canonical Letters was to preserve the common Depositum of the Faith fafe and inviolable by virtue of this Commerce. And therefore those Bishops that embraced a different Faith, had no right to the Orthodox College, or to the Commerce of Canonical Letters. So that there was no occasion to depose such persons, but only to supply their places as being vacant. 'Twas the fame as to Schism, which divided such as were guilty of it from the Church, and confequently from the Sacerdotal College, and all Correspondence with it; for, according to St Cyprian's principles, such a person was without, he was an Alien, he was nothing; and therefore there needed no fentence to turn him out of the Church, or deprive him of his Office. Hitherto therefore we find no power exercised over Bishops; nay we read of no depositions of Bishops in these times for any Crimes, which did not actually take away the Episcopal Power itself; none for their immorality or ill administration of the Church, and confequently none which fupposed those that deposed them, to enjoy a superior power over them. Except it were upon the account of Faith or Communion, we read of no Excommunications issued out by Bilhops against any of their Brethren approved by their Collegues, altho' the fecular dignity of their See was never to extraordinary. Nay, we find that the Bishops even of the principal City, as Victor and Stephen for instance, were deservedly reprimanded, as often as they attempted any fuch thing, and that by the most grave and prudent Bithops of those times. In thort, we read of no Impositions inforced upon particular Bishops, even by Synods, altho' they confented to them; so far are we from reading of any inforced upon them only by the majority of Synodical Suffrages. However, I am not therefore of opinion, that all Subordination, even of Bishops, is to be taken away, but much less that of Synods. I only maintain this, that whatever Rights are acquired by the confent of particular persons among themselves, ought only so long to be maintained as those Benefits continue, in confideration whereof the respective Bishops agreed to these Patta Conventa: Because Fiduciary Trustees cannot depart from any rights, which are committed to their charge, unless it be upon the score of of some greater advantage to the Society, wherewith they are intrusted. Otherwise, in case they betray their trust, there lies no obligation or restraint upon their Successors, why they shou'd not challenge their own rights again in the name of the Society. There was no reason why Christ should ratify in Heaven the betraying of a power bestowed by himself, or not confer the very same power upon the Successor, which the Pred ceffor ought not to have alienated. Nay, in truth, he had no authority to alienate it.

Upon this account there is a failure in those Rights that were granted to the Church of Rome, in confideration of the City's Dignity, which was then the Metropolis of the Roman Empire, as we are taught by the Fathers of the Council of Chalcedon. And as for the Rights she challenges in the name of St Peter, it fully appears by the principles we have laid down, how weak and ill-grounded they are, if we'll be determin'd by the opinion of the Primitive Church. St. Peter had no Primacy at all over the other Apostles when he resided at Rome; neither had heany one to fucceed him in his Apostle. thip, but much less in his imaginary Primacy over the Apostles. Besides, if he had been obliged to leave a Successor behind him, it does not therefore follow, that the Church of Rome must have been any ways interested in that Succession; but rather the Church of Jerusalem, wherein he was first constituted an Apostle, and Member of the Apostolical College, which, as we have prov'd, belong'd to the City of Ferujalem. It does not appear in History, that S. Peter had any mind to renounce this Church, or if he were never fo minded, that it was in his power to have done it, fince by this means the duodenary number of the Apostles, which exactly answer'd the twelve Tribes of Israel, must have been broken. Nay, after the death of St Peter, we find by Eusebius, that the other Apostles being return'd from their Travels, which they had undertaken for the propagation of Religion, were concern'd in the Confecration of Cleopas the Son of Simeon, as being Members of the Church of Ferufalem. Therefore our Adversaries must find us out an Equivalent elsewhere, if possibly they can, to make us some amends for the loss of this primitive Independency; for their Church has no other pretence to retain the rights that were heretofore granted her, fince the true reason why they were granted her at first is long expired. Synods, now without a spontaneous giving up of this right, I fee no reason (if we exclude a particular Confent) why absent Bishops should be concluded by the Decrees of any Council, let it be as numerous as it pleafes. I don't here urge, what I have already demonftrated to be true, according to the principles of St Cyprian's Age, that no Synod has aright to determine any Bishop by the majority of its Voices. And were it practicable, yet in the most numerous Council that ever was known, there was never the Majority of Bishops actually present upon the spot. What reason then can be assign'd why the abfent, who were more in number, thould be concluded by the majority of the present, tho' much inferiour in that respect? Several modest Romanists have been aware of this, who grant there's no obligation even in the Decrees of General Councils, till they are received by all Churches. Now if any obligation lay upon us from the Councils themselves, it wou'd be unlawful for any Church to diffent from them, because that Subject fins who prefumes to disobey a lawful power. Therefore fince they derive all their Obligation from the Confent of particular Churches, (which they own ought to be spontaneous and free) it plainly follows, that this obligation does not proceed from any Foreign Authority, but our own voluntary motion. Therefore I don't fee why those Churches, that have laid these Obligations upon themselves, should not have power to revoke 'em when they fee convenient, notwithstanding the Decrees of Ge-

General Councils first introduced them into the World; but in the Primitive times such things as General Councils were altogether unknown, and confequently cou'd have no original Rights but only fuch as were derivative. 'Tis true, there were Provincial Affemblies held even in these times, and perhaps ever fince the first devolution of the Ferusalem right; for I have remarked, that all the Collegues of Provinces had a right to appoint Successors for Churches when become vacant, whether they fent their Suffrages by way of Letter, or delivered them viva voce in the Synod. But as I have already observed, those that were so constituted, were not then Bishops. 'Tis evident, that there were Councils held in Easter and Autumn, purely for the fake of conferring and advising together, in imitation perhaps of the Grecian Pylagora, and other Pagan Priests, but this did not in the least infringe the rights of particular Churches. And when any Controversies arose between Bishops of equal Power and Authority, who had no Judge to determine them by his Sentence, I don't fee where they cou'd fo properly and fitly be made up as in a Provincial Synod. Even under the + A-1, 2, 3, 4 postles, Judges were appointed over private Christians, that their Differences might not come to the knowledge of their Enemies, and why not much rather over Bishops, whose Arcana's were more Sacred, and wou'd occasion a greater Scandal if once divulged? Tis certain, that Christ did not make every Bishop a Judge in his own Cause; since this

For to pass sentence only in those causes which related to a common and free Commerce between Bishop and Bishop, was neither judging of God or Christ, nor yet making one felf a Bishop of Bishops. For in this case, he that breaks off the Commerce, is guilty of first violating the Unity, as not being the principle of that Unity, which he in conjunction with the reft ought religiously to keep. And therefore this College was the Guarrantee of the Publick Concord, and no reason was there to doubt, but that he who had violated the Concord, might be ejected out of the College, whose Concord he wou'd not maintain, and another be fubflituted into his place by the College, who wou'd observe a more peaceable Conduct. Now the Person that was substituted wou'd enjoy his Epilcopat by the very fame Right as his Predecessor had done, viz. from the Therefore if the Episcopat conferr'd by the College, was imputed to God and Christ, for the same Reason when it was taken away by them, it was to be imputed to the fame; and if when a Bilhop is created by the College, those that were under his jurisdiction ow'd him Obedience, when he was taken away, all his right to their Obedience was confequently taken away. But now in those Cases which had no manner of connexion nexion with other Dioceses, the Bishop had no Competitor to controll him, but had the intire administration of his own Diocess. not liable to be reftrained by any Appeals. which we fo often meet with in the Canons of a latter date. By degrees indeed Synods extended their supervising Authority from things relating to the common Commerce even to the private Affairs of Dioceles, under colour of establishing an Uniformity, for which there was not the least necessity; and gave Rules and prescribed what was to be done in every Man's particular Diffrict, and this under the penalty of Eccesiastical Censures, if any one presumed to break these Orders. I will not here take upon me to fay how justly this was done : however after the Courfe of fo many Ages, there's now Prescription and the consent of every Bishop confirm'd by an Oath added to the primary Obligations. No one doubts but these are to be duly consider'd, especially so long as the Benefits of a Synodal Commerce compensate the loss of the former rights; but not so, while the affembling of Synods is clogg'd with fo many unlucky obstructions, that now we can hardly hope for them; for in this case all the Benefits expected from Synods are likewise cut off. A Man's voluntary quitting of his rights is null, when the advantages, upon the profpect of which he made this Ceffion, don't answer. For this reason the old Rights must return of courfe; as also an Authority to resume and provide for one felf, when there are no Synods to regulate these matters. The same must be faid of Appeals from one's own Bishop either

But to what purpose, some will say, is all this discourse concerning the Origine of Eccle- The power fastical Government? Why, to convince my of Bishops Reader of what importance these things are, in their seaccording to the Reasonings of true Christia- Churches of nity, tho' they are looked upon to be trivial much greatand infignificant by those, who rather take er importheir measure of the Christian Doctrines from tance, than the Theological Syntagms and Institutions of is com-Modern Writers, that from their true Primi-lieved tive Originals. I mean chiefly two things, wherein the Soul and Life of our cause confifts; the first whereof is the Episcopal Government; and the second, their independance from the Secular Magistrate. consider both in their turns. Indeed, if the Episcopal Authority were only a voluntary donation of the people for the better government of themselves, we had no great reason to concern our felves about any form of Church Government, fince if this Form were alter'd, it wou'd proceed from the very same power, which had first given a Being to it. But 'tis evident the Case is quite different, ince this alteration does not proceed from the first Institutor of this Government, but from Man, whereas the Government itself was fet up by God. Men have no reason to expect the Benefits of mystical Unity from God, if they lay aside the conditions appointed by God himself, for the attaining this mystical Unity. We have already thown, that God was pleafed that the vilible Unity should imitate the Mystical: Since therefore the Mystical Unity refers to a Mystical Head and Mystical Person, it necessarily follows, that the Government of that visible Society, which entitules us to partake of the Mystical Unity and Society, ought to be Monarchical. People may fay what they will, but 'tis impossible to assign a perpetual excuse, that shall justify the abrogation of a Government that was instituted by God to last for ever. We have no just pretence to expect any Rewards if we neglect, and that by our own proper fault, the Means appointed by God for attaining these Rewards. Nay, we can have no hopes of a Pardon, if weimpose our own Conditions upon God, that so we may attain those Benefits that are only conferr'd by him. Neither can we hope, that the Sentences of particular Churches should be confirm'd by all the reft, while some of them have revolted from that fort of Government, which is every where elfe received: for we have demonstrated, that all that Commerce wholly belongs to the Episcopal College, neither are there any other Collegues of Bishops, as History teaches, but Bishops. We have shown, that the Primitive Christians were in the right for believing fo; for that the reafon why all other Churches were obliged to confirm the Sentences of the rest, was to be deduced from God and Christ, so that they were only obliged to confirm those Sentences, which were supposed to be pronounced by them, and

For this reason they thought it more adviseable to bear these Scandals than have them founwarrantably reformed, the at the fame time they would have affifted the Re-formers with all their hearts, if they had kept themselves within due bounds, and staid for a just Authority to remove these Scandals out of their respective Territories. To inflame the fulnicions of this danger, it most unluckily fell out, that feveral persons, who never had a legal and ordinary Call, were forced to have recourse to an extraordinary one upon this occasion. Now prudent confidering Men cou'd not but be fenfible, what a dangerous Gate this pretence wou'd hereafter open to evil-minded Zealots, if it were admitted without the extraordinary Arguments of an extraordinary Vocation. They found that the very Novelty of this Constitution wou'd be an eternal Argument against it, and hinder its being received with an unanimous and durable confent, fince it had trampled under foot a Government, established by the prescription of so many Ages, and apparently confirmed by fo long a Continuance. They forefaw, that the Successes of these Innovators wou'd but pave the way for other bold Undertakers to innovate after them, and poffess the present Governours of the Church with a fear and diffidence of their own fecurity. They concluded, that a Government which had its rife and establishment from the outrages of its own Subjects, depended wholly upon their Courtefie and would never be ftrong enough to carry on any future Reformation, in cafe great numbers, and Phofe very powerful, were to be Reformed, fince it was much feebler than that which had been subverted by the obstinacy of the disabedient By this violation of the lipilional Bower ithey utterly aliebated the Ecclas flies, whose Authority might have bem eniployed most fafely in Reforming the Son dals of the Church, and made them the school invererate Entities in the fite para na Solecifor in Politica to disbliga for many powerA-powerful Princes of Germany, that were invefted with a Secular as well as Spiritual Authority: for if any of these embraced the Reformed Religion, they were turn'd out of their Sees, as Hermannus Archbishop of Colen. and one of the Electors, found by experience. This was not all, they had nothing given to compensate the loss of what they had parted with, but were degraded and made ignoble, and fet upon the fame level with the Common Ordinary Ministers. I need not tell you how cold and indifferent, nay, how backward and averse to any thoughts of a Reformation this must needs make these persons, whose Authority ought to have had the greatest Sway in the affair of Reforming Religion. I will only maintain, what Pious and Candid Judges (fuch as I now appeal to) I know will readily grant to be of the highest concern, that fo many barefaced Sacrileges committed on the Revenues of the Church, which were not only permitted in order to gratifie the avarice of Princes, but in fome manner approved and juffified, did, in all probability, draw after them Gods fevere displeasure; but especially the Sacrilegious Usurpation of the Ecclefiaftical Power, which is the most Sacred of all Rights belonging to the Church, and the total extirpation of the highest Order of the Church, All this cou'd not but highly incense God and Christ, the Avengers of E. piscopal Authority, as both Ignatius and Cyprior inform us: We ought not therefore to wonder, if the fuccels did not answer ex pectation, and the Reformers Interest, instead of getting ground, and making a fant progress, declines daily, and is now upon the brink of ruin. For which reason I con-jure you all, who are desirous of Primitive Peace and Primitive Discipline, to return to the place from whence you fell, to the place where you flood when you enjoy d the Peace and Discipline, in thort, to the place where you were, when your condition was happiest. Be not assumed to return to better State, but rather give an example to those, whom you your selves exhout to reform themselves. You that can see the Beam in another's Eye, be pleased to take the More out of your own. Let it never be said, that it has happen'd through any fault of your that the Catholick Church is not restored to its ancient Concord, together with the ancient Conditions of Peace. The Prethey have not extinguish d the Order itself, yet tensions of they have at least rained the Primitive Rights directly opat belonged to it. For this they effectual-posite to ly do, who let up the Pope for the Princi-the Primi-ple of Unity above all other Bilheps. Now of Bilheps. we have feen that the Primitive Church, which of Bifhops. we believe ought to be a Pattern to the rest, Ribos. We have feen, that if any one talked after this manner, or gave others an occafrom to draw any fuch confequence from his discourse, how absurd and unthinking a Wretch they took him for. We have feen, that those who opposed this monstrous Hythefis, argued upon found and received and enablished Conclusions because the name of the Episcopat implies a Supreme We have feen how the Primitive Fade Bishops of Rome, whenoled any other Conditions upon the common Faith the Common Faith the Common Faith the Commerce of Canonical St Cyprim particularly commends because he did not liften to the Stories of his Schismatical Africans. Nay, even after St Cyprian's time, the African Fathers condemn'd all Foreign Appeals in the fourth Century. What occasion is there then for that Jurisdiction, which the Learned Monfieur du Pin grants the Pope, at least as he is the beginning of Unity? Nothing can be plainer, than that according to the Principles of St. Cyprian's Age, every Bishop is to be looked upon as the beginning of Unity, no less than he of Rome. 'Tis likewife as certain, that whatever St. Peter's pretended Superiority over the Apostles was, yet he had none at Rome, for he did not come thither, till St James was actually fet over the Church of Fernfalem. and consequently over himself. Now, 'tis as certain, that St Peter had none of the %rusalem Apostles at Rome, over whom he could exercife this pre-eminence. Tis possible, indeed, that he, who perhaps prefided over the Apostles formerly, might preside afterwards at Rome; but then, as I observed just now, he had no Apostles there to preside over. And therefore 'tis downright folly to think to prove from thence, that Rome has any right to be reckon'd the first of the Apostolical Sees, much less that any Bishop was Superiour to the Apostles, or to the Bishops who fucceeded the Apostles. But St Cyprian, they'l tell you, confesses, that the Sacerdotal Unity bad its beginning in Rome. Tis true, this he might confess of his own Country of Afric, altho' this Commendation did not at all belong to the Chair of St. Peter, but not of the other Christian Provinces: for tis highly probable, that that the Africans were converted by the Romans, and together with the Faith received their Bishops from them, whom St Cyprian always owns to be next to Christ. What Superiority therefore cou'd the Bishops of Rome challenge over the African Bishop, according to the Doctrine of that Age when St Cyprian flourish'd? Why, to decide all African Affairs in Afric, at least by his Legates, and by the African Canons: Well, but the Principles of St Cyprian's Age don't allow the Pope fo much Authority as this comes to. For no Appeals from Bithops were allowed in Afric; where it was decreed unlawful for one Bifhop to judge another Bishop's Actions; fince that was altogether as enormous as to judge God and his Christ, and wou'd be reckon'd an insupportable Tyranny in the Church; fince St Cyprian himfelf, who was the Metropolitan of the first Seat, denied this Power to an African Synod, and to the Metropolitan of a Proconsular Province; and lastly, fince they abominated the Titles of the full Seats, which favoured of the least Secular Arrogance, I mean fuch as denoted any power over their Collegues, like that of the Supreme Temporal Magistrate over those that are Subordinate to him. I wou'd fain know how any Judgments cou'd pass upon particular Bishops, according to the Canons, when as yet there were no Canons in private Dioceles, which challenged a Superiour Authority to that of the Diocefan himself? I own, that the Bishop of Rome might have the place of Primate affign'd him, even in the African Synods, and confequently fequently in those very Causes, wherein we have acknowledged the Power of a Synod to be greater than that of private Bishops, and this Construction won'd I make of those fuspected words foisted into the Nicene Canon by the Romans, viz. The Church of Rome bal always the Primacy. But then 'tis evident, that the Bishop of Rome obtained that Right by the consent of the African Churches, which after all, was not greater than that of the other Primates of Afric. The word Primate was originally of African growth, and I believe hardly used any where else in those times; and therefore it is not to be ftretched fo far as to fignifie a greater power, than it did in Afric. Now I think we have fully demonstrated, that even St Cyprian himself, who was the Chief Primate of all the African Provinces, did not pretend to challenge to himself any power over his Collegues. Befides, this was not peculiar to Afric, but agreeable to the reasonings of the whole Primitive Church. And therefore, if the Romanifis will speak out the truth freely, they must own, that this our Parity of all the Episcopal Rights, is much more Confentaneous to the Primitive Church, than that extravagant Power of the Pope, which they fo obstinately defend. I cou'd wish that those of better Tempers among them, wou'd remember the warm Disputes that happen'd about the Jus divinum of Episcopacy, even in the Council of Trent itself.

Now we have proved, that the Original and Celeftial Church was that of the Apostles, upon whose Foundation those ought to be built, who defire to grow into a Holy Temple in the Lord. Eph. 2. 20, 21. But there were in the degenerate Ages that follow'd afterwards, Revelations, as well as Mincles the Witnesses of Revelation, if we will believe the Roman Writers. Neither, indeed, do we see any reafon, if the thing were to be done over again. why we should restore this Primacy. We have plainly feen by the example of the Church of Ferusalem, upon how slippery a bottom the whole Christian Interest stood, while all other Churches in the World depended upon that fingle one. For when that was overwhelmed, all the rest had fallen of course, in case our Salvation had been confined to that Church; unless by a new devolution of that Right, Matters had been to brought about, that for the time to come every particular Church was invefted with a sufficient power to regulate and govern itself. But it wou'd not have been so, if it had been a received Article of Faith, that all other Churches ought to be Subject to that of Ja rusalem; for then our Faith itself had been in danger, when that Church was now Extinct, to which all the rest ow'd obedience Tis certain, that the Unity of the Catholick Church velatiu'd be faith, Faith, elongs nd foon hule Brie both thefe a lawenjoy y reaagain, . Church must have been utterly destroy'd. when the Principle of that Catholic Unity no longer existed. But the Apostles no where promife any fuch thing, as the perpetuity of the See of Jerufalem; nay, they toretold the quite contrary. And just upon the approaching of that destruction, the Apostles were vet alive to inform their people what God intended to do upon fo furprizing a Revolution. Neither of these two things can the Romanists pretend to say for themselves, in case their Church had met the same Calamity. They tell us indeed, that the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against the Church. S. Matth. 16. 18. And yet at the same time pretend, that it is built upon the rock of the Roman Church: But it any fuch cafualty thould befal them, they don't expect any Apostles to instruct them, what is to be done in so presfing an exigence. Come then, let'em thew what fecurity they have, that the like ill Fate shall not destroy the whole Fabric of their Church. Alas! they have none to shew. As for that fort of Unity they now enjoy, 'tis purely owing to the City of Rome's being an independant City, and subject to no earthly Prince, but the Pope. Did it own any other Master, all that Catholic Unity, which is derived from the Unity of that Bishop, must fall of courle. For Suppose any Infidal Prince should make himself Master of this City, or indeed a Christian, but one that was of a different Communion from the Pope, can we imagine that the Princes of the Papal periwafion wou'd fuffer that frequent Commence Sandy or

of their Subjects with the Pope, or fuch vall Treasuresto be exported into the Enemy's Country, on purpose to make this Pontiff rich, who when he was stript of his Wealth, wou'd only ferve to enrich the Enemy? And yet should they do otherwise, they wou'd exclude both themselves and their Subjects from the Unity of the Catholick Church, if it were true, that this Unity depended upon the Power and Government of the Church of Rome, as its Head. And thus we fee, that the Catholic Church wou'd be utterly extinguished, which cou'd not subsift without that so uncertain Unity of its Head; I mean, when the Body was fepaparated from the Head. For this reason the Muscovites, the' without any hoffile intention. renounced all obedience to the Patriarch of Constantinople, from whom they received their Christianity, when they saw the Turk had him under his Power. Neither wou'd the Case have been much better, if even a Prince of the Pope's own Communion had Conquer'd Rone: for except that fingle Prince; none of the rest wou'd have own'd him for their Common Father, who was a downright Slave and Vassal to another. In short, fo very flippery and precarious is this Principle of Unity, that unless we suppose, that the Prince, who refided at Rome, had esther a Soveraign Power over the reft, or that the City of Rome will acknowledge no other Prince but the Pope; all this boafted Unity of the Catholic Church must tumble down to the ground. Sandy a Foundation, ever came from Christ and his Apostles? Or, who can think it annexed to Rome, fince the Fews and their Metropolitan City of Jerufalem had carried the Precedence even in the new Peculium, if they had not fallen from their Privileges, that were deftin'd for them, meerly through their own Fault? Neither will the Auferibility of the Pope folve this difficulty, for so Gerson calls the Translation of the Papal Seat from Rome to any other City, conforming himfelf to the barbarous Language of the School-men in his Age. We own indeed, that the Pope kept his Seat for forne time at Avignon; but this Translation cou'd only continue fo long, as there was no lawful Bishop at Rome. Suppose we therefore, that the Prince, who made himself Master of Rome, wou'd have permitted all his Subjects inhabiting that City, a free use of Bishops, and of the Christian Religion, the confequence wou'd have been this: He that had been fet up at Avignon, now the See of Rome was full, might indeed have been called Bishop of Avignon, but not of Rome: The reasons for the Pontifical Primacy, having nothing to do with the Seat of Avignon, but that of Rome; in which place the Romanists give out, that S. Peter held his Chair, and not in the former. Besides, there was no other Metropolitan City of the whole Empire, but Rome. And thus the Head at Rome had been separated from the Body belonging to it; and at Avignon there had been no Head atall, but only a part of the Body separated from the Head. Now can any Man of Sense believe that our Saviour, or even the Apostles wou'd have made no better a Provision for the XLIX. of Bishops more for Church, than if the Bifhop of the Bishop of Jerulalem.

Tis plain, that this Devolution of the 7e-The Parity rusalem right upon the Operary Jeses of the feveral Churches, was infinitely more advanthe publick tageous to the Church in general, than if its Good of the whole power had fallen upon the Bishop of a ny one particular Church, as the Romanists We have already observ'd, that pretend. Rome had the former Scheme is much better calculated been the on- for bearing of Persecutions, which our Lord ly Heir of both promised and foretold to his Disciples. Indeed, if there were no fuch turns and revolutions in Humane Affairs, as we daily fee, I confess we should have no reason to doubt, but the larger the Jurisdiction of a good Bishop was, that the Benefits arising from his Administration, wou'd be so much the more extended. But who dares engage his Word, that in any one See, there shall be a perpetual Succession of good Men? On the other hand, we are to confider, that if an immoral or vitious person should happen to be Master of a very large Dominion, the ill Influences of his Example and Practices will spread so much the farther, and that 'tis in the power of a bad Successor to confound and annihilate all the good things, which feveral good Predeceffors have established before him. danger is more univerfal, and confequently greater, then all irraginary advantages can pretend to compensate. ny forces, which by perfecutions may hinder it, and so much the more, as the Bishop has a larger Territory that may be feized by more Princes: Besides, that it is in the Power of Secular Princes to hinder the frequent Concourse of People from very remote places, which, however, is absolutely necessary for the exercise of Government. Therefore the larger District any Bishophas, the more difficult matter will he find it to govern it, if Princes think fit to oppose him. But to me 'tis plain, that Christ intrusted the Bishops with such a Power, as notwithstanding the outrage of Persecutions, and the opposition of Princes, hould ftill go on, and defend the Flock committed to their care. For which reason leffer Diffricts are more advantageous to the Interest of Christianity, which require no such great Cession from one's right to govern them well. Otherwise, if those of the lowest rank must not ftir a ftep, till they receive the Orders of their Superiors, who are at fo great a distance from them, so soon as ever this Commerce is shut up, the respective Bishops will want power to provide for the welfare of their Flock; which certainly is a greater inconvenience than can be made amends for, by never fo great advantages from the Comdecefmerce of a distant Government: for as the advantages of a diftant Government are less, ently so the dangers are much greater. And theres can fore, there is the less reason why any one are to should part with ancient rights upon the score of these Compacts, which require a Cellion re indof of more Rights in a remote, than in a neigh. bouring Government. But the Primitive Christians acted more wifely, the greatest part of whose Councils were concluded with in the limits of the Provinces where they met. Even the largest of them did not exceed the Compass of a few Provinces, and those all in the Neighbourhood, and no Bishop then pretended to exercife Authority over his Brother Bishops, And yet we find that Herefies were suppressed by the Suffrages of these Bishops. who agreed then much better, than after General Councils were midwiv'd into the World. Thus there was no necessity to recede from that parity, which was then received by the Bishops.

Princes have no right over als.

I come now to the Second Head, of which I promised to discourse, viz. of the Independance of the Bishops from the Secular Power. the Bishors As for the matter of Fact, 'tis undeniable, in Spiritu- that in these Primitive Times, when the blackest Malice cou'd not condemn their Behaviour to the Magistrate, the Bishops exercised an Authority over the Christians that were Subject to them, notwithstanding the Magistrateused his utmost Efforts to oppose it. Tis likewise certain, that there were several Districts of Cities, with the Suburban Regions belonging to them, all which acknowledged the fame Bithops, altho' they were not granted to the Christians by the Emperors, or the Magistrates of the places, where these Affemblies were celebrated. From hence 'tis evident, that they were visible Bodies, altho' consociated by the hope of invisible Rewards, and difinguish'd from each other by visible Limits. before they had obtained the confent of the Secular Magistrate. It appears also by History, that the Christians who lived in these times, defended these Rights of vifible Churches, and likewise of visible Difricts, and that they thought themselves obliged in Conscience to defend them, because God himself gave them those Rights, and not the Magistrate. 'Tis beyond all dispute, that Constantine found the Church in the actual possession of these Rights, and the Principles upon which these Rights were founded, we have already shewn to be of that Nature, that the Magistrate could never be a partaker of them. God indeed was the Author of them, as we have proved, who can lessen the Rights of the Magistrates whenever he fees fit, or confer the fame Rights upon others, but for a different end than he granted them to the Magistrate. Now all this Right depends upon the Benefits accruing from the Ecclefiaftical Society; the Establishment whereof is grounded upon this, that whoever refuses to be admitted into it, or behaves himself refractorily to the common Government of the Society, ought to go without the Benefits that otherwise he might expect from that Society: But now the Benefits of an Ecclefiaftical Society are infimtely nitely greater than what any Magistrate upon Earth can pretend to bestow. As for instance, he cannot admit one into the Heavenly Catholick Church; nor has our Lord, the Invifible Bishop, resign'd his Charge to him, nor yet engaged to ratifie in Heaven what he shall do upon Earth. He has no where conferr'd fo much as the Divine Name of Bishop upon the Magistrate, to intimate that the Magistrate's Actions, as he is a Bishop, concern him. And therefore the Civil Magistrate, who has no Commerce with the Heavenly Church, has no Authority to oblige other Churches without his Dominions, to ratifie any Sentences that pass in his own Territory; and yet we have shewn, that the Bishops of Churches are invested with this Power, by which means the Rebels of particular Churches are driven out of the Communion of all the rest. Indeed, were it not so, the Ecclesiastical Cenfures, instead of being dreaded, would be the most contemptible things in Nature. this purpose we may cite those Admonitions of St. Cyprian concerning ehe last Judgment of the Bishops, which was only obnoxious to Christ and his Father; which he urges to prove, not only that there was no Judge above the Bishop in his own Church, but also that the Divine Indignation was to be feared, if any one refifted the Judgment of the Bishop in Matters committed to his Trust Saul and Uzzias were dreadful Instances of this Truth, when they intermedled in Sacerdotal Affairs; and indeed al! the abovementioned upon in the least obliged to ratifie in Heaven what he has done upon Earth. Nay, all that Right, whereby the Consciences of Subjects are obliged, proceeds from Christ, and not from the Magistrate. Therefore if Christ fill acknowledges the Bishop, this Act of the Magistrate is void and null, and in no wife obligatory to the Conscience. In like manner that Person sins against Christ the Invisible Bishop, who refuses to pay due Obedience to the Visible Bishop, who still represents the Person of Christ, and he ought so far to fear the Revenger and Afferter of all Visible Lawful Bithops, as if the Magistrate had done nothing against him. After the same manner will he be turned out of the Heavenly and Original Church, if he fuffers himself to be turned out of the Terrestrial Communion of the Bishop; for by this means he will lose his Right to the Communion of all other Vifible Churches, as being destitute of the Communicatory Letters of his Bishop. And therefore, without wronging our Consciences, we dare not part from the Communion of our Bishops, who were ejected out of their Sees by the Secular Power. For the Magistrate cannot absolve us from the Obligation whereby we are bound to our Bishops; but much less dare we own Altars directly opposite to theirs, nor acknowledge those of the adverse Party, now in possession of their Thrones, to be Bishops, who, according to St. Cyprian's Doctrine, are profane, Aliens from Christ, and confequently have no Power in the Celeftial and Original Church. these first Attempts of Sacrilege go successfully on. 'Tis true, the Storm begun with us; but flatter not your selves that this Violence of the Laity will stop short at us, and proceed no further. Hitherto we of the Reformation have been a little too indulgent to our Princes, and too unnatural to the Church. While we had the Civil Magistrate on our fide, and had nothing to fear, but from the over-grown Power of the Ecclefiafticks, we did not carry our Views far enough, nor fufficiently provide for the Security of the Church, in case any of our Princes for the future should happen to fall out with All the advantage we got by this immoderate as well as unpolitick running down of the Clergy was, that we divefted the Churchmen of their Rights, but made the Laymen every where their Enemies, and less respectful of the Holy Order, than in Equity and Justice they ought to be. The Princes were mightily pleafed with this new Accession of Power, which they got out of the Spoils of those, by whom they themselves formerly had been oppress'd. Now we ought rather to have taken the middle way, that while we were afferting to Cafar what was Cafar's due, we might not in the mean time defraud God and his Vicars of their just undoubted Rights. Indeed while this Harmony and good Affection between the Prince and his Ecclefiasticks lasted, we felt no manner of inconvenience from these Concessions; for so long as both of them thus chimed together, there was danger of their quarrelling; and this made made the fucceeding Churchmen espouse the Errors of their Successors, tho' prejudicial to their own Rights, with all the Alacrity in the World, as if the Scene would never change. Upon this the Laity growing still bolder and more encroaching, began with more confidence and fafety to exercise that Malice against the Ecclesiasticks, which they had so long harbour'd in their Breafts, and what was the most monstrous part of the Farce, Churchmen themselves were the Advisers of this ill Usage of their Brethren, and betray'd their own Rights for fear of the Storm which hourly threatned them from the Lay quarter. This made them more luke-warm and backward in the defence of their own Rights, while the Laymen were unanimous to oppose them, and the treachery of some Churchmen made the rest of their Brethren more divided among themselves, and more irrefofolute to carry on their common Interest. The Revenues of the Church follow'd this external Force; and the more corrupt part of the Ecclesiasticks, which in most Bodies of Men make up the Majority, most obsequiously follow'd the alluring Scent of Mammon. On the other hand, the Caufe of the Churchmen was weakned, not only by their being ignorant of their own Rights, but also of the Obligation they lay under to affert the Rights they were intrusted with, in the Name of the Society over which they prefided, while they meafured their Obligations rather by common Opinion than Primitive Originals. I am forry to be able to affirm, that the Luke-warmness of the Reformed is greater in defending their own Reformation, than the Violence of the Romanists to oppose it. Those Princes that embrace the Papal Religion, we find most inveterately bent to persecuteus. For our parts we are not forry that ours don't take a Pattern from them, nor exercise the same Cruelty. Let them enjoy that Worship, which is so much the less acceptable to God and Christ, and so much the more different from primitive Christianity, as it delights to be barbarous. If 'tis our case to depend more upon God than Men, we congratulate the Happiness of our Condition, and look upon it as an Argument of a better Caufe, that we are inferiour to our Adverfaries in Cruelty. What chiefly affects us is, that our Princes are a little too apt to revolt to the other fide, and bestow such Emoluments and worldly Advantages upon our Adversaries, as are enough to tempt others to revolt from us likewife; neither do they manifest any Zeal to make publick Examples of those Revolters, who as yet have not laid aside the Profession of the Protestant Religion. All these things put together, thew

shew what little reason the Reformed have to repose so intire a confidence in Princes. At the fame time 'tis some comfort to us, that our Adversaries (if they consider Matters calmly) have no mighty Temptation to value themselves much upon this score; for no Man in his Senses will pretend to maintain, that Force is an Argument of Truth. same Canon that plays for them now, may foon after be turn'd upon them; and indeed these Revolutions are the easiest things that may be in absolute Monarchies. He behaved himself very severely towards some Bishops of his own Communion, Men famous for their Exemplary Piety and Sanctity, only for defending their own Rights granted to them by the Laws. have talked more than once of fetting up a Patriarch in France, when it was fear'd it would come to an open Rupture between the King and the Pope. To this purpose we may call to mind the famous Decrees of the Faculties of the Sorbonne, who are maintained at the King's charges for this end, to be let loofe upon the Popes, whenever they begin to be refractory. But the most important Dispute of all is, that which they have with the Court of Rome concerning the last Judge of Controversies. The Parasites of the Papacy place the Pope above all Councils, making him alone Infallible in his Chair, and General Councils no otherwise than as they are approved by him. Nay, they account the contrary Doctrine to be down-right Heresie, which however is defended by the French, by many Germans and others, who follow the Councils of Siena, Pifa, Constance, and Ba-Therefore it necessarily follows, that they are Heretics to one another, who are in turns damned by that Judge which the other part looks upon to be Supreme and Infalli-Neither do I fee how, according to their own Principles, they can communicate with one another, who are Heretics to one another, and condemned of Herefie by the chief Judge of Controversies; and therefore in ftrictness of Language the French rather make up one Faction than Communion with the Italians. No Man of Sense will offer to say that these Propositions, from true ones, could become false, merely because it was the Prince's pleasure it should be so. Neither can we suppose, that the Clergy alter'd their Opinion of these Propositions for no other Argument, but because the King thought fit to revoke them. If then these Propositions were false, I defire to be inform'd, why they were ever employ'd against the Popes? and, if true, why were they afterwards revoked? But why upon the King's commanding it to be fo, if the King owns his Clergy to be the proper Judges of Religious Controversies? This he the Destru-ought to have done, if he had been a true Etion of the Friend of the Church, and of Religion in ous and fatal confequence to the common cause of Religion; and of that nature are those Rights, of which we have been difcourfing. As for the Spiritual Goods of the Church, God did not annex them to any particular Sect of Christianity, but to its politick Body, I mean, not to the Faith of Chriftians, but to the Society. We are Baptifed into one Body, I Cor. 12. 13. And the Eucharistical Bread which we break, is it not the Communion of the Body of Christ? For we being many are one Bread and one Body: For we are all partakers of that one Bread, I Cor. 10. 16, 17. Now the Body of the Lord is the Church, Col. 1. 24. 1 Cor. 12. 27. The Sacraments are the Bonds of this Political Body; fo then if that is once diffolved, it necessarily follows, that all the benefits of Christianity must be destroy'd together with it. There will then be no longer any Body of Christ for us to be united to here upon Earth, and which by our Union with it may make us Partakers of the Celestial and Original Church, and of the Celestial Rights of that We can have no Union Celestial Church. with the invisible Church, but through the vifible one, neither with the invisible Bishop, God and his Christ, but by the visible Bishop, and him lawfully ordained; for the invisible Bishop in Heaven will not ratify the Acts of any other Bishop, nor indeed of any one but a Bishop. If therefore we have any regard for our own Salvation, we ought to defend and stand by this Body with our joynt endeavours. Our concern for the Publick Good, for for the Faith once deliver'd to the Saints, in short, for Piety and Discipline, demand this at our Hands. The fecurity of all these depends upon the Body politick of the Church, and upon the Governors of this Body, and upon the obedience due to these Governors, without which they are shadows of authority. and no more. We maintain the Faith fo long as Hereticks are turn'd out of Communion; and all who profess the Communion of the true Church abominate all Fellowship and Correspondence with them. But we have found, by woful experience, how uncertain and unfteddy even our Faith is, fince those Persons have thrown off obedience to Bishops; upon which the Episcopal Power depends, and by the means whereof now they are destitute of the secular arm, they might be encouraged to prevent the growth of Herefies. We may fay the fame of Piety, that no method is so efficacious to establish it for ever, as that all truly Pious Men should be informed, that Obedience is rather due to Places and Offices than to Persons, and that they should exhort and advise others to a strict observation of these Duties. For by so doing, they will in the first place exercise their own Humility, which is the chief fecurity of all Religion, and likewife add the Virtue of Obedience to their other Duties. By this means too they will be able to render an easier account to God, in case any thing should happen otherwife than they intended, while they did not exceed the Limits of their own Office, but paid due Obedience to their Governours nours appointed by God. Thus will they increase the Power of the Church to the Edification of Manners that are to be reformed by the Terror of Cenfures, which will be greater, and more acceptable to God the Author of publick Government; than that of private Persons, be they otherwise never so pious. For the Reverence that is paid to the personal Merits of Men, as it moves within a less Compass, so it lays not so great a Restraint upon the Conscience, and at last dies with the persons: Whereas the Duties that are owing to Places, are paid by all that are subject to them, are inforced by the fear of Punishments and hope of Rewards, and enable thole that hereafter enjoy them to promote good Works, and bring them to a defired end. By this means pious Men will become partakers of the good things, which the fincere and faithful Governours of Churches, being affifted with the forward Zeal of well-disposed people, shall be able to perform. So they will find God and Christ more favourable and propitious to them, whom they worship in the Visible Bishop. Lastly, By this means Discipline, which has been hitherto for much neglected, will revive and flourish. when the Punishments of the Church are dreaded as they ought to be, and Men are throughly inflamed with a paffionate defire of obtaining its Rewards. So great advantages, and the gaining of fo many Souls, are fufficient Incentives to ftir up the truly Pious, to affert and promote the Authority of the Governours of the Church with their joint Endeavours, altho' the Magistrate should oppose them; they being firmly resolved at the same time to violate none of the undoubted Rights of the Magistrate, according to the Principles and Example of the primitive Church: But it would deftroy the Unity of the Christian Body politick, to advance and strain the Magistrate's power so high, that he may give or take away the Episcopal Rights, and absolve their Subjects Consciences from paying to the Bishop the Obedience they owe him. For if fo, we shall have no body of a Church at all whenever the Magistrate pleases, if we shall have no Governours to prefide over us, or shall not be obliged to pay them Obedience, tho' God and our Consciences teach us the contrary. The Patrons of our Princes were undoubtedly of this Opinion, when the Popes of Rome usurped their Rights, and took upon them the power of deposing Kings and absolving their Subjects from their Oaths of Allegiance, fo that the Secular Authority was not fufficient to defend it felf, in case it happen'd upon any Quarrel to be attacked by the Pope. Let them therefore turn the Tables, and confider how 'tis possible for the Church to provide for it felf against a persecuting Magistrate, if the Magistrate is to be invested with all her Rights. Let him therefore not challenge that to himself which belongs to another, and which when a Foreign Power usurped over his People, he thought himself very unjustly dealt with, and complained that he was despoiled of that Authority which was necef-necessary to support his Dignity. And this the Magistrates wou'd certainly do, if they would be impartial Judges in Affairs not belonging to them, and if they would not do that to another, which they would not have done to themselves. Otherwise, good-night to the Communion of the whole Church, if at any time the Magistrates of every place shall think fit to prohibit it. But still 'twill be more pernicious to Christianity, if out of Fear and Cowardife we tamely throw up those Rights of the Bishop to the Magistrate, which we own do belong to him; for then knowingly and willingly we shall prefer the Fear of the Magistrate to that of God and But if we can accustom our selves fo to live, what place, I befeech you, can Religion have among us, when we own a greater Fear than that can poffess us with? for no one can be guilty of fo base a Thought that believes the Christian Religion to be true.

He cannot but own this to be a very unconcluding Reafon. But what follows is of more importance; he owes it likewise to the Rebellion of the Guisan Faction, who carried on their ambitious Defigns under the Mask of Religion. If the Romanists there, after the Example of the Primitive and of our British Church, had kept their Allegiance to a Prince of a different Religion, who notwithstanding had the right of Succession on his fide, his Grand-Father wou'd have undoubtedly Educated his Father, and his Father him in the Reform'd Communion, and then our Adverfaries wou'd not have had this mighty Patron, of whom they boaft fo much. We fee then that this Great Monarch owes his Religion to a certain reason, which ought not to be so taking with Princes neither, viz. because those of the Papal Communion are more difloyal to their Sovereigns than we are. However if they wou'd but liften calmly to Reason, Princes wou'd eafily be convinced that they trefpass against their own real Interest, when they offer any Violence to the Religion of their Subjects, and much more to their own. Princes have any thing firm and to be depended upon in this World, 'tis the Allegiance of their Subjects confirm'd to them by an Oath. Promifes they make to themselves? The true obligation of an Oath terminates upon this, that the Party who has taken it is afraid to vioate it for fear of the Divine Vengeance, when at the same time he is not in the least afraid of his Prince. Therefore an Oath is then muly serviceable, when People are restrained by the fear of God from doing that, which if they should do, their Prince can never punish them for it. This consequently suppoles that God is more to be feared than the Prince, even according to the opinion of those that fwear. On the other hand, Perfecution makes them more afraid of the Prince than of 'Tis plain then that it takes off all that fecurity, which is then chiefly expected, when the Prince has not force enough about him to exact this Fidelity by tear. For he that affronts and despises God, as often as he is commanded by his Prince to do it, must of necessity testify a greater fear of his Prince than of God; and therefore to foon as he ceases to fear his Prince, what signify his Oaths of Fidelity and Allegiance, or what obligation is fo facred as to bind him? In like manner, if a Man neglects the Oaths and Obligations of his own Worship, what reafon, I pray, have you to believe him in Oaths that are tender'd to him by a different Worhip, which he thinks to be false and odious to God? Tis a prodigy in my mind, that any prudent Prince should be so overseen as to by any stress upon those Oaths, or in the ex-

And in this he can pretend no Zeal for the good of Souls, for the profession of the true Faith avails nothing to our Salvation, unless we firmly and cordially believe it to be fo. If it were believed, there wou'd be no occasion for any Violence to oblige Men to embrace But indeed this method of proceeding is fo far from contributing to the conversion of Souls, that on the other hand it rather introduces a contempt of all Religion; for one Prince cannot pretend any thing, but another, if he pleases, may copy from his Example; Nay, it rather provokes them to imitate him against their own inclination. And if this were put in execution, what advantage wou'd the Popish Communion reap by it? Suppose it contributed to promote Popery in France, it wou'd ferve to abolish it in the Dominions of the Protestant Princes. then let a Prince of the Reformed Perswasion fucceed a Popish one, and he in like manner compel his Subjects to embrace his way of Worship. 'Tis possible that in the same Succeffion there may be various changes of feve-Now if all Princes did ral Communions. the like, the refult wou'd be this, that while their Subjects professed to believe every thing as their Prince wou'd have them, they wou'd believe nothing fincerely and cordially, and at long run there cou'd be no relying upon any Oath whatever. Common-wealth will be exposed to the greateft danger, if any Neighbouring Prince, who espouses the quarrel of these Male-contents, should carry Fire and Sword into the Bowels of the Country; especially if he should meet with any favourable Success, to give these People an opportunity to throw off the Mask, and fafely to execute what they have fo long projected. But yet a Prince wou'd do greater mischief still, who relying upon a foreign force should violate and infult that very Religion which he himself professes to follow. Even his own Conscience will inform him, that he must furely expect the indignation of God, who is the Avenger of Religious Duties. As he himself is a despiser of the Deity, so others by the influence of his example cannot but be fo too. For Atheists blowup the Coals upon these occasions, giving out, that Religion is nothing but a Politick Cheat, contrived on purpose to keep the Mob in awe by the fear of another World; and they are the deeper confirm'd in this opinion of theirs, when they fee Religion fo awkwardly managed by Princes, as if they had no regard at all to the Truths she Preaches, but to that unaccountable Terrour the possesses People Towards the spreading of this Atheiftical Infection 'twou'd not a little contribute, if the fecular Magistrate out of a vain Prefumption of his own force should despife the venge of God, whom however he wou'd not have to be despised by his Subjects upon any Confidence whatever; and lastly, if he should remove the Power of Judging in Religious Affairs from Courts that are better skill'd in them. and confequently wou'd better determine the truth and bring it to his own inspection: For this wou'd give the World occasion to fay, that he does not so much consider the truth of Religion, as what use and benefit may be made of it. In short, the cause of Atheism is not a little encouraged when People fee the very fame numerical Propositions one while approved and another while damn'd, according to the pleasure of the Prince and not of the Bishops; and lastly, when the Civil Magistrate pretends to eject the Bithops that are invested with a more noble Power by God than their own. Oaths and Promifes are the firmest Supporters of all Crowns, but there is no fecurity in an Oath if you take away Re-And 'tis a plain Case that Princes to the com- voluntarily strip themselves of this Security, mon Inter- that commit any out-rages against Religion.

I heartily wish that this Consideration of the tion, if the Secular Power may have that good influence on all Pious Men, and true admirers of primitive Antiquity, whether they are of the Reformed or Popish perswasion, as to excite them to the defence and maintenance of the true Religion. Heaven, and our trust from Princes to the invisible Bishop above. This is of the last importance, fince the Enemies of our common Christianity, as Atheists, Deists, and the oppofers of all revealed Religion, appear barefaced in publick, and threaten us with no less than the subversion of our Constitution. This will revive and invigorate our Zeal for the publick Interest of the Church, extinguish all fears of Perfecution that are endur'd for a good cause, and finally make us cautious that our Adversaries may have nothing to reproach us with juftly. Besides, let us seriously confider how necessary for obtaining the rewards of Righteoufness, all those Duties are which we owe to the Body Politick of the Church; for 'tis certain that thefe rewards are not to be ascribed to the merit of our Piety, nothing of which we pretend to with respect to God, but to our Covenant with him: Now this Covenant is made with Christ and the visible Church his Body, whereof unless we are Members, all our pious Works will fignify nothing towards obtaining these rewards in Heaven. How necessary is it therefore that we should acknowledge the Bishops upon Earth, in order to obtain Christ's favour in Heaven, who is the invisible Bishop and Rewarder of fincere Piety? Let every one therefore endeayour, according to the Authority he enjoys at Home, O you Reformed Patrons of true Religion and Antiquity, to reflore the antientRights of Bishops, together with the Name, in his own respective Country. By this means the Bishops of other Churches, to whom whom the right of fuch a Commerce belonged according to the practife of the Primitive Church, will have Collegues to maintain a Correspondence of Canonical Letters with. Neither do I fee any reason why if this were once done, such a Commerce may not be kept up with all the Reformed Churches at least; for I don't look upon the Socimans, nor their favourers the Armenians to deferve that Name. In the rest I can perceive no fundamental Doctrines wherein they differ, I mean fuch as are clearly and exprefly laid down in the Holy Scriptures; for 'tisthe unanimous belief of the Reformed Divines at least, that only fuch are properly call'd Fundamentals. Now no other Doctrines but those that are Fundamental, ought to hinder us from keeping Communion with other Churches, because those and only those relate to the Depositum, or thing committed to our trust, I Tim. 6. 20. Neither is the Communion of Churches that are equal, and have no Authority one over another, to be broke off upon any other account. In the mean time particular Churches may prohibit within their own Districts, such Propositions as they either look upon to be dangerous or scandalous, with respect to the apprehension of the Auditors, or such as will raise unnecessary heats and tumults, and do more harm than good. For in these matters the Circumstances, which belong to the inspection of the local Governours, are often of much greater importance than the things themselves. One good effect of this Correspondence will be, that by this means the Authority thority of every Church will be greater, even over its own Members, while the Excommunicates of particular Churches are to be received into the Communion of no other Church, without Canonical Letters under the Hands of their own Bishop, nay, not by those that have not condemn'd those Propositions by any censure of their own. After the same manner as we obferved above, that in the Primitive Ages, those Bishops that receiv'd penitent Adulterers into Communion, and those that excluded them from it for ever, Communicated friendly together, and all by Virtue of that Primitive Doctrine, viz. that the fentence of every Bishop in his own Diffrict is to be reckon'd as the fentence of Christ, and no more to be judged by another Bishop than God himself and his Chrift, least he should feem to fet himself up for the Bishop's Bishop. Thus the independence of particular Churches, their various Rites and Ceremonies; and their different Doctrines provided they are not fundamental, will be no obstacles to Communion, so long as they refuse not to confirm the fentences of other Churches; which they will certainly do, if they receive no Subject of any foreign Church into their Communion without Letters Communicatory from his own Bishop. How much easier are these Primitive terms of Communion, than those which Churches of a younger date impose upon one another, without any manner of Authority? Were these steps towards a Catholick Concord once made, I doubt not but the Reformation wou'd be a confiderable gainer by it.

In the first place, that Scandal, which, as I have already observed, has hinder'd it from making fo great a progress in this latter Age, as it did in the beginning, will be removed and taken away. And fecondly, it will bring over those to our Party, who were offended at nothing in the Reformation, but that it was not carried on by fo Legal an Authority in the Reformers as they could have wish'd; but especially if new Bishops are ordained by others. Besides the publick Methods concerted for propagating this Reformation, it will be supported with a just Authority; both which we now want; tho' we find, to our expence, that our Adversaries have them, who up on this account are superior to the Reformed. But Secular Princes hinder all fuch laudable Defigns, being diverted by their Affluence and Luxury from carrying their Thoughts to Heaven; fo that they feldom trouble themfelves about the Welfare of Souls, unless their Temporal Affairs happen to put them upon it: Now can any thing be more scandalous than to postpone Heaven to Earth? Neither are they at all concern'd about Communion, especially without the Limits of their own Dominions. Whereas were the Bishops restored to their ancient Rights, as they readily acknowledge that Christ intrusted them with the Care of Souls, fo they wou'd endeavour to give him a good account of fo important a Charge. This they wou'd make their chief, and only business, nor take farther care of Temporals, than as they conduce to a Spiritual End; which is certainly the Order

der which God himself prescribed. The Presbyters then wou'd affift the Bishop in his Diocefan Synods, his Collegues likewife abroad, with whom he maintains a Correspondence by Canonical Letters, wou'd not be wanting in their turns to help him, whose consent one fingle Magistrate can never be able to engage for. And now may God raife up many SPENIERS, who will diligently promote and recommend the practife of these common Doctrines, without Enthusiasm, or reviling the Superior Ecclefiafticks, without any detriment or hindrance to Communion and Brotherly Concord. May he prosper fuch Advancers of true Piety, and grant that all of us may be of their opinion. So shall we see a true and unblemish'd Reformation, liable to no Scandals and Exceptions, start up and revive, which thall daily make a greater Progress, and extend its Limits. And so much to our Brethren of the Reformati-

Tis time now to apply our Difcourse to the Romanists, whom likewise we appeal to The restaas Arbitrators of this Controversie, who will ring of be foon convinc'd how easie a matter it is these Prito return to the Catholick Concord, if taking mitive Rights of their Pattern from the Primitive Church, the Bishops they agree to affert the ancient Rights of Bi-will pave shops. If they govern themselves by the the way to practife of those Ages, the Bishop of Rome an Union with the will furnish them with no pretence to break more modeoff this Union; neither will his Supremacy rate Romaover the Catholick Church pass for an Article nists. of Faith, nor those be reckon'd in the Class of Hereticks that don't acknowledge it. So then the only Question that remains, is concerning the Schisin, whether at least this Supremacy can be maintain'd upon the foot of Ecclefiaftical Humane Law? But as this Affair does not affect them, who are effablish'd by Prescription in the possession of their ancient Rights, fo neither does it concern fuch as have of themselves reassumed these aforesaid Rights into their own Hands, upon the failure of that Reason for which they were at first given up. We have already proved that they had a Right to reassume them, as foon as the Reason of their being thrown up ceas'd; and also that they were the proper Judges of the time when it fail'd. And therefore as for what concerns the Government of the Church, I fee nothing that should hinder them from coming into the fame College with the Reformed Bishops: Not certainly in the Judgment of those, who afferted the Divine Right of Episcopacy against the Parasites of the Papal Court, nor yet in the Opinion of those who afferted the Gallican Liberties against the Pope, but especially of those who think not any Concession, even of the Pope, reason sufficient why he should challenge them to himself. Indeed 'tis impossible but those must think so. who even in defiance of the Pope, believ'd it lawful to fet up a Patriarch over themselves. Let them therefore allow other Provincial and National Churches their own Liberties in their turn; for why fhould they blame other Churches for doing that which the Galli-

Gallican Church has threatned to do, and pretended she had Right on her side, if the Quarrel had not been made up, and a Reconciliation agreed to? This they must allow to be reasonable, if they acted sincerely in this matter, and not merely to comply with the Pleasure of their Prince. From what has been faid, it undeniably follows, that as this Supremacy had its rife from Ecclefiaftical Right, fo it may be laid afide and abdicated by the fame, and that whenever a Pope of free generous Principles thinks fit to abdicate it for his Successors, it will be for the Interest of the Catholick Church in general. At the same time I am not ignorant that there are other Doctrines de fide, which are given out as Reasons why the Bishops of the Roman Perswasion cannot come into the same Fraternity with the Reformed. All this I own to be true, if they determine their Faith by the Opinion of later Writers, I mean those of the middle and lowest Antiquity, as also if they take the Decrees of those Ages concerning the Articles of Faith to be intallible. But we have demonstrated. that the Catholick Church was the same with the Original, which was likewife the fame with that of the Apostles, and consequently that the Catholick Faith is no other than that which the Apostles themselves preach'd while they were converfant here upon Earth. Now that the Innovations of the following Ages are wholly different from that, they themfelves gave us all the just reason in the World to fuspect, since they were forced to coin new Rere-

Revelations, and new Miracles to recommend them to the World; for all which there had not been the least occasion, if they had been Matters of Faith, which was fufficiently confirmed by the Miracles of the aforesaid Apostles. Nay, the Modern Romamists give us just occasion to suspect the same, while they derive the Evidence of their new Faith from the new Declaration of the Church, but fo, that those who lived in former Ages, before the Church had lately declared it, might have fafely denied it, without the least Imputation of Heresie. For Example, the Worshipping of Images and Saints can never puls for a new Declaration of an old Belief, fince we find not the leaft Traces or Footsteps of them in those undoubted Monuments of the Primitive Church, which flourished before Constantine. Besides, that very Doctrine of the Primitive Parity of all Bishops, that, to instance in no more, gives a terrible blow to the Authority of the Romanists. And then the Word Infallibility is an Invention of the latter Schools, or at best not much ancienter. However, there is no reason why the Romanists should monopolize Infallibility to themselves, unless they cou'd prove that their particular Church is to be taken for the Catholick; for they themselves will readily own, that it only belongs to the Catholick Church. But if you once take away the Primacy of the Pope as the Principle of Catholick Unity, they have nothing to offer why they should any more be called the Catholick Church than the Greeks have. more Churches of Apostolick Erection to boaft of than they have, and may object their Agreement with them to the Romanills. and yet those of the Papal Party are so far from owning the Greeks to be infallible, that they accuse them of the groffest Errors. Therefore let them acknowledge themselves to be fallible, and then we shall eafily convince them, that the Ages wherein thele new Articles of Faith were hatched, are neither to be commended upon the score of their Piety nor Knowledge, in understanding the Faith formerly deliver'd, or conveying it down faithfully to Posterity. Now if in these Ages of more Experience and Learning they wou'd fubmit to call the Decrees of the more ignorant times to an Examination, I dare engage, that confidering what vast Improvements have been made in all the feveral Branches of Learning, and particularly in Theology, they will think otherwise of these Matters than their ignorant Predecessors did before them, especially if they lay aside The Protethose Prejudices that are rather contracted by Hion of the Custom than Judgment. So easily will the Prince no Primitive Rights of the Bishops pave a way advantage to Catholick Concord, even among the Ro- even to the manists, when they are once restor'd.

It will moreover concern them, if they be violates wou'd vigoroufly and cordially promote the the Liber-Interest of Christianity, to affert the above- ties of his mention'd Rights of Bishops, not only a-nal Church; gainst the Papal Usurpations, but the En- which he croachments of secular Princes. The Galli-defends atan Clergy labours under the fame inconvergainst the

nience in France, as we do here in Great Britain. Their Prince maintains and fecures their Liberties against the Pope; and so far matters would go well with them, if he himfelf did not impose a Yoke upon them, which when any one else endeavours to lay upon their Necks, then he's for shaking it off. But the mischief on't is, that this is only a changing of the Master, and not the afferting of liberty, as 'tis commonly believ'd. Servitude can never be reconciled to liberty, let him that wou'd force it upon us pretend what he pleases. If the King wou'd be thought a fincere Patron of Liberty; let him grant his Bishops a free unrestrained Power of voting in Spiritual Matters, while they abstain from meddling with Temporals uponany pretence whatever. Let him not interfere with their Spirituals, who thinks it fo prejudicial to his Crown, if Ecclefiafticks pretend to interfere with his Temporals. Let him not do any thing which he wou'd exclaim against as contrary to Ecclefiaftical Liberty, if the Pope offered to do the same. Let him not impose his own Opinion in Matters of Religion. Let him not inflict any Mulcts or Punishments upon them for thinking otherwife than he does in Affairs that properly belong to their inspection, but only suffer them to be inflicted by the higher Ecclefiafticks. By this conduct hell give the World an earnest that he believes the Religion which he professes, and gain this good Effect upon his Subjects, that they too will believe it, and by its awe keep firm to their Duty and Allegiance. wife the Church will reap no manner of advantage by fuch a Prince's Patronage and Protection. For if the external force of the Secular Arm be opposed to the Ecclesiastical Centures of the Pope, the confequence will inevitably be this, that the fear of the Secular Magistrate must be own'd to be greater than that whereby Ecclesiastical Decrees receive their Sanction. Now if the Subjects of the Church do but once imbibe fuch an Opinion as this, there will be nothing left to oblige them to any one Spiritual Society and Communion, whenever the Magistrate shall think fit to perfecute them. But infinitely more mischief will this Opinion do, if it should happen to find any Countenance from the Ecclefiafticks themselves, and that would appear with a witness, if they should never defend any Doctrines contrary to the Papal Cenfures but when the Magistrate importunes them, and should alter their Sentiments in Religion meerly at his Command and Pleafure. Now this is a greater damage to the Church than the Prince can possible compensate by his Temporary Protection of it. Otherwise, if any Usurpation were to be allow'd in Sacred Matters, that Tyranny would carry a better face with it, which was exercised by Churchmen against those of their own Function, than by Seculars. For in the former Case there is a pretence at least of some Power given by God and to be confirmed by him, although it fomewhat exceeds its due bounds; nothing of which can be pretended by a Layman in Sacred Affairs. So that I may venture to affirm, that if a Churchman exercises a Power over his Brethren, which is not warrantable by the Canons of the Church, yet he does less harm to the publick Interest thereof; for in the first place here's no Example of the Sacerdotal Sanctimony violated by a Layman; which directly terminates in unhinging the Security of all Laws, as far as the Conscience is concerned in them, in trampling upon the Security of Oaths and Promifes, when Religion it felf, whereon the Security of all the rest depends, is insulted: And, laftly, in undermining Religion it felf, when fuch bad Examples are given by those who have all the external Force in their hands. Besides, it manifestly tends to the Contempt of God and his Church, if the Violaters of both escape unpunish'd, or at least seem to do so for a time, fince God takes the Patronage of Religion and Sacred Matters to himfelf. For if there is any Providence, the world thinks it obliged to take such provision, that the punishment of wicked Men should not be retarded; for Men will be less afraid to use any Injufrice in relation to their Fellow-creatures, when they fee God tardy to revenge his own Caufe. I do not pretend to determine with what Solidity this Argument is used, but we may find by the Canonical Author of the Ecclefiaffes that people used to argue after the same rate in former times, Because Sentence against an evil Work is not executed speedily, therefore the Heart of the Sons of Men is fully fet in them to do Evil, ch. 11. We have no reason to doubt, but that in this degenerate Age, impious perions.

fons, who are glad of any opportunity to expose and revile our Holy Religion, support themselves in their Wickedness by such forts of Reasonings, tho' nothing can be more abfurd: For either God will punish the Violaters of Sacred Things in this Life, and that very speedily, and then Princes must of necessity fear the Punishment they so justly deferve, or elfe he will delay and referve it to a future Life, and then they'll have no occasion to boaft of Impunity, fince they are only deferr'd in order to a more terrible Punishment. However, they will even by this means lofe all the Security they derive from Religion; which, after all, is the fafeft Fortification, and to be preferr'd to a thousand Armies : For Armies, without Fidelity, are but prejudicial to Princes; and there's no Fidelity without Religion. But 'tis more the Concern of an Ecclefiaftical Uturper to promote the common Good of Religion, fince he makes it his chief and his only Bufiness, and not subordinate to any other that has no relation to Religion. And confequently 'tis reasonable to conclude, that he is better skill'd in Sacred Matters, than one that only looks after the Salvation of Souls by the by, and has his Thoughts chiefly employ'd upon other things of a quite different nature. Such a one, tho'an Usurper, as I have faid, will think it his highest commendation to fee Religion flourish in publick, and besides, has a stricter Friendship with his Collegues dispers'd all over the World, by whose joint Affistance and Counsels the publick Affairs of the Church are to be administer'd; and, and, laftly, who has a Right from God to oblige all his Collegues to ratifie his Acts, if he keeps himself within his proper Bounds, which no fecular Prince can pretend do. Tis certain, that Christianity would be in a much better condition, if Christian Princes would shew a greater regard to their own Souls than to their Life and Dignity, and confider'd, that for gaining of Souls to God, they wou'd be rewarded with a brighter Crown of Glory, than for governing their Kingdoms never so vigilantly and wifely. But 'tis no wonder that these thoughts shou'd more seldoin happen to Princes than to Ecclefiafticks, who make it their principal Profession.

LVII. tive Re-Spells pay'd to Bilhops to the modern Catechisms.

The prefent Juncture demands, that those who have a true Zeal for Christ, into whose Service they initiate themselves at their Baptism, shou'd attempt something Great and Heroical for his Name, to unite all the Churches upon Earth together, and fortifie themselves with united Strength against the approaching Tribulation. Since we find the Temporal Magistrate to be so uncertain and wavering, we ought to think of fome expedient whereby to preferve our Churches and Communion inviolable, even without his affiftance. This we shall be able to effect, if both in our Books, our Discourses, and our Sermons, in Season and out of Seafon, we urge and inculcate the necessity of those Duties, which ought to be paid the Bishop, according to the received and laudable Practife of the Catholick Church; but especially if we take care to infert all things relating to this Head into our pulick Catechisms. which has been hitherto too much neglected by those of the Reformation. For these Duties are not only fufficiently important but are of fo wide an Extent, that they very well deferve to be inferted into our Catechisms. The importance of them is evident enough, fince the whole power of Governours and the Cement of all Society depends upon the Obedience of those that are subject to it; which is null and infignificant, if the latter fuffer themselves to be difunited from their respective Heads. The recommending and preaching up of these Duties had that good effect in the feverest Perfecutions of the Primitive Church, that notwithflanding all their oppositions, the Church continu'd still entire and unhurt, while all that profes'd Christianity, even Laymen as well as the rest, despised all the Terrors and Threatnings of the Secular Magistrates, and thought they ought not to be put in the fame Scale with the Communion of the Bilhop. Hence it appears of what importance Government is in every Society and Communion; for without that there can be no fteddy Discipline either with relation to Faith or Manners. And therefore if the Precepts of Faith and Manners are things things worthy to be taught in our Catechisms, there is no doubt but the afferting of these Duties ought to have a place in the fame. But were all this of no confideration, yet these Duties ought to be recommended, if it were upon no other account but that they affect every person that comes to be Catechised. There is not one Member helonging to the Church, of whatfoever Rank or Class he may be, but is obliged by these Duties, upon which the Body politick of the whole Church depends, and is preserved in its Station. Nay, to speak truly, it must depend upon the spontaneous confent of all its Members performing these Duties, whenever the Magistrate takes a contrary Courfe. And therefore 'tis necesfary that every individual Subject of the Church thould be early tinctured with thefe Doctrines, leaft the Terror of the Civil Magiftrate should oversway him. Upon this account 'tis requisite that every one should be inured to this practife of Submission from his Infancy; for by this means his confent will be fleddier and more conflunt in the day of Trial. What then have I to do but to conjure you all to employ your united Endeavours for the preservation of the Church? If every Man will do what belongs to him in his Station, we have no reason to despair but that God will bless fuch generous Designs that are intended for his Honour, and the Good of his Church. 6 AP 58
